Distribution of lobster larvae on the Scotian Shelf, 1978-81

by F.L. Watson and R.J. Miller. Halifax : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Biological Sciences Branch, Benthic Fisheries and Aquaculture Division, 1991. iii, 21 p. : maps. Bibliogr. (Canadian technical report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 1801) ISSN 0706-6457 MICROLOG 92-02050 1 fiche

Inshore lobster fishermen in southern and western N.S. strongly objected to the existence of an offshore lobster fishery since its beginning in 1971 on the grounds that the offshore fleet catches females which would otherwise produce larvae that would drift inshore to seed their fishing grounds. This study investigates that possibility. From 1978-82, the spatial and temporal distribution of fish eggs and larvae from Georges Bank to eastern Cape Breton were investigated. Lobster larvae were also collected and removed during sample sorting. This report uses larval distributions from the surveys, as well as from previous surveys, and considers the effects of wind on larvae transport to investigate the possibility that larvae released offshore seed inshore grounds.

This report presents the chemical data from six surveys of Halifax Harbour conducted from January to September 1989. Samples collected from six sites were analyzed for salinity, nutrients, suspended solids, dissolved metals (Zn, Cu, Cd, Ni, Pb, Mn, Fe), reactive mercury, and total particulate metals (Zn, Cu, Cd, Ni, Pb, Mn, Fe, Al). The dissolved and particulate metal data are compared to levels from the harbour mouth and surface water on the Scotian Shelf.

This report examines the abiotic environment of representative lakes across insular Newfoundland and determines the environmental and morphometric variables that may affect species associations and distribution of the limnetic zooplankton assemblages. Particular attention is paid to identifying variables that may be related to the long range transport of air pollutants (LRTAP) and the possible influence of these variables on the zooplankton populations. Attention was also paid to the zoogeography of zooplankters to provide detailed baseline information for future limnological research in the region.

Canada is currently involved in another attempt at constitutional reform which, it is hoped, will reconcile the competing and sometimes conflicting views of the federations. The distribution of powers and functions will figure prominently in this constitutional agenda. This study provides an overview of the distribution of government powers and functions evident in other federal systems, with a view to the relevance of these examples to the current Canadian context. This will entail an analysis of the form that these powers take in different federal constitutions, and the more substantive matter of what areas of jurisdiction are assigned to the two orders of government.

During a field investigation in late August, 1988, a dense algal mat was discovered at the confluence of the Gold and Heber Rivers. The mat was identified as being diatomaceous and dominated by Gomphonema geminata. Small pockets of the same growth were found in the Gold River just upstream of its confluence with the Heber and in upstream areas of the Heber itself. At the time, this was the only known occurrence of G. geminata on Vancouver Island. By July 1991, the algal mats had spread to other rivers. This report documents the streams on Vancouver Island affected by G. geminata, follows growth patterns to July 31, 1991, and assesses its impact for recreational and fisheries areas.

by A. Gunn and J. Ashevak. Yellowknife : Dept. of Renewable Resources, 1990. ix, 34 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (File report ; no. 90) MICROLOG 92-06161 1 fiche

The numbers of Peary and barren ground caribou wintering each year near Spence Bay have been increasing since the 1970s but no surveys of the population have been done since that time. The Spence Bay Hunters' & Trappers' Association was interested in a survey to establish the increase in caribou numbers so that the number of caribou tags could be increased. In the 1970s, natural gas discoveries in the High Arctic Islands led to a number of studies on the environment and wildlife along the route of projected pipelines, one of which would have crossed the Boothia Isthmus. This survey estimated the numbers of caribou on the Boothia Peninsula and the area south of Spence Bay (the Simpson Lake area) and determined which subspecies forms used which areas for calving. A systematic strip transect survey was conducted of the two areas between 31 May and 9 June 1985. This report provides data estimating the populations and their distribution.

The purpose of this paper is to raise the profile of tax issues in the current constitutional debate. It outlines various criteria for the allocation of taxation authority and provides an historical overview of the division of taxation powers in the federal-provincial context. It also examines the current allocation of taxation authority and tax revenues and offers analyses of the full range of specific taxes within the current tax system, focusing on the ability of each to fulfill its defined objectives. Finally, it suggests how tax authority could be reallocated to improve the efficiency, flexibility, and accountability of the current tax system.

Fredericton : la Province, 1992. 46 p. : ill. L'éd. anglaise (A Discussion paper on cross border...) sur la même fiche MICROLOG 92-02088 2 fiche

Les achats outre-frontière ont une incidence sur les détaillants néo-brunswickois et leurs employés, le tourisme, les secteurs manufacturier et agricole. En outre, les achats outre-frontière réduisent l'assiette fiscale qui sert à payer les services publics provinciaux et fédéraux. C'est pourquoi il faut examiner les raisons qui poussent de plus en plus de gens à aller magasiner aux États-Unis et étudier les moyens à prendre pour réduire les pertes qui en découlent au Nouveau-Brunswick. Ce document porte sur ce sujet et se présente ainsi: on y trouve d'abord des observations initiales sur les effets des achats outre-frontière; ensuite, on examine une série de problèmes et de facteurs pertinents qui favorisent les achats outre-frontière. Suit une série de considérations afférentes. Enfin, l'exposé se termine par une liste préliminaire de mesures proposées afin de remédier à la situation.

Winnipeg : Manitoba Environment, 1992. 10 p.
MICROLOG 92-06348 1 fiche

The Pembina Valley Water Cooperative is proposing to develop and operate a comprehensive water supply system as a long-term solution to the water supply problems experienced over the past number of years in the region of Manitoba known as the Pembina Triangle. The proposal involves withdrawing up to 20 cu ft per sec of water from the Assiniboine River and diverting it to the Boyne River and then to the Stephentield Reservoir. These draft guidelines were developed by a federal/provincial technical advisory committee and are being issued to the Pembina Valley Water Cooperative as reference for consideration for their environmental assessment work relating to the proposed water supply. They cover the assessment process, the intent and scope of the project, and information and assessment requirements, including project description, environmental setting, pre-development planning review, environmental impact assessment, impact mitigation, residual impacts, monitoring and research, public input, technical reference, and report format.

Les droits ancestraux peuvent être définis, en partie, comme les droits que possédaient déjà les peuples autochtones du continent avant d'établir des contacts avec les nations européennes, et qui, dans une mesure indéterminée, ont survécu à l'établissement et aux revendications de souveraineté des Euro-Canadiens. Ce document aborde la question des droits des autochtones et se penche sur le sujet comme tel, la politique du gouvernement fédéral à l'égard des revendications territoriales; les compétences législatives; la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982 et les modifications proposées à cette loi, les perspectives interculturelles sur les droits des autochtones; et les mesures parlementaires.

Ontario Hydro is currently investigating the use of a reinforced concrete integrated container (CIC) for dry storage, transportation, and possible final disposal of irradiated fuel. The system, composed of the container and the impact limiters to protect both the top and bottom ends of the CIC, is being investigated for the structural integrity of the container, assuming a nine meter top-down corner drop onto a rigid target. Three finite element impact analyses, based on drop orientations of centre of gravity directly above the initial impact point, 5 degrees vertically tilted drop, and 5 degrees horizontally tilted drop, were carried out to decide the most critical drop orientation in support of the Phase II drop tests, as well as for investigating structural response in the final design of the CIC and the impact limiter.

The 1986 Speech from the Throne cited traffic in illegal drugs as a grave and growing threat and a National Drug strategy is now being implemented. The seriousness of this threat and the urgency of the need for new measures to deal with it have been questioned, however, by some who suggest that the problem in this country is not of crisis proportions. This review discusses the extent of illegal drug use in Canada, its impact on our society, and some proposals for remedial measures.

While oriented strandboard (OSB) is increasingly accepted as a structural building product, its application in stressed skin panels (SSP) is limited because of a lack of engineering data for short- and long-term flexural behaviour. In 1986/87, 24 SSPs were constructed, six with flanges of Douglas-fir plywood, six with flanges of Canadian softwood plywood (CSP), and 12 with flanges of OSB. Half were tested for short-term (elastic) behaviour and the other half for long-term (creep) behaviour. Long-term creep testing was begun in February 1987 and continued through to 1989/90. This report presents the results of the 1989/90 testing, which continued measuring and recording test data for deflection, relative humidity, and temperature on the three types of panels; established model predictions for each type of load duration set up for each type of SSP; compared prediction and experimental results using accepted analytical methods and indicated whether the models can be used for accurate prediction of time dependent properties of the different SSPs, determined the value of model parameters that can be related to mechanical properties of SSPs and compared those results to those of other jurisdictions; and indicated the practical significance of the results for house performance.

This paper argues that while the unemployment rate is one of the most cited indicators of the state of the economy, it does not, in itself, offer an unambiguous indication of the way in which the labour sector adjusts to change, or of the difficulties that individuals have in finding re-employment. This is because the unemployment rate is determined not only by the number of individuals that become unemployed but also by the length of time they spend unemployed. Accordingly the purpose of this study is to examine the determinants of the duration of unemployment spells, and therefore to shed some light upon how the labour sector responds to both positive and negative shocks.

The empty container allocation problem occurs from the management of the land distribution and transportation operations of international maritime shipping companies. It involves dispatching empty containers in response to requests by export customers and repositioning other containers to storage depots or ports, in anticipation of future demands. This paper proposes a dynamic, stochastic model which accounts for the space and time dependency of events and the uncertainty of supply and demand data, substitutions, relationships with partner companies, imports and exports, and massive equilibration flows. The paper gives a mathematical formulation and an equivalent large stochastic multicommodity network flow with gains model. Various modelling choices, data requirements, and algorithmic considerations related to the implementation of the model are also discovered.

Tree species often revegetate harvested forest sites but desirable conifer trees may not be the first to assume dominance. This study was designed to provide descriptions of vegetation communities that develop on a range of newly harvested sites across the North Central Region of northwestern Ontario. Relationships between these post-harvest vegetation communities and pre-harvest site classification units were also investigated. Sampling was conducted on 40 cutovers to cover a range of pre-harvest stand conditions. Each sampled cutover was classified to a Northwestern Ontario forest ecosystem classification treatment unit. All sites had been harvested within five years of sampling, most had been mechanically site prepared, but none had been chemically treated. FO ON PR SC

This inventory of the park involved three days of pre-field operations involving accumulation of maps, airphotos, geological reports, and discussions with Ontario Geological Survey staff. Field work was completed in the summer of 1990 and consisted of driving all roads through the area, walking the Bruce Trail and its side loops, and traversing portions of the area using pace-and-compass techniques. ### Les Ecart de salaires entre les industries et les salaires d'efficience : certaines données canadiennes

Ce document a pour objet de jeter plus de lumière sur la question des écarts de salaires entre les industries, grâce à des données canadiennes récentes. L'objectif consiste plus précisément à essayer de répondre aux questions qui suivent. Premièrement, quelle est l'ampleur des écarts de salaires entre les industries pour des travailleurs de compétences égales au Canada? Ces écarts varient-ils dans le temps? Deuxièmement, pourquoi ces écarts existent-ils? Représentent-ils des écarts compensateurs, ou constituent-ils plutôt des rentes économiques, selon les théories des salaires d'efficience? Et, troisièmement, ces écarts peuvent-ils contribuer à expliquer la segmentation du marché du travail et les taux de chômage enregistrés récemment au Canada?

Echidna constraint reasoning system : next-generation expert system technology

by W.S. Havens...et al. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1990. 22 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05740 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Echidna is a new type of constraint logic programming system for model-based expert systems applications. The system improves upon the limitations of existing shells by combining aspects of schema-based knowledge representations, constraint logic programming (CLP) and dataflow dependency backtracking to produce a next-generation expert system shell. Echidna builds on recent advances in CLP by integrating within the language a clausal reasoning maintenance system and object-oriented knowledge structures. This paper argues that next-generation expert systems will incorporate richer structured knowledge representations based on object-oriented programming principles and relying on more efficient constraint propagation and dependency backtracking control structures. The paper describes the architecture of Echidna as well as several applications under development.

The Rouge Valley Park study area encompasses the valleys of the Rouge River and Little Rouge Creek, and the tablelands between them and east towards Petticoat Creek and south from Steeles Avenue to Lake Ontario. These lands and waters in the City of Scarborough and the Town of Pickering are predominantly owned by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority and the Ontario Ministry of Government Services, with smaller holdings by the Ministry of Transportation, Ontario Hydro, other utilities, and a number of private owners. This study used a number of detailed resource inventories undertaken over the past 20 years. Field studies concentrated on the flora and vegetation communities of the parks, its breeding and migrant avifauna, and its resident fish, mammal, reptile, and amphibian communities. The report gives a regional background, information on the Rouge Valley Park, and planning considerations, including the significance of the park, an evaluation of significant natural areas, summary of the life science features of the park, and habitat and species restoration. Lists of the vascular plants, birds, mammals, amphibians and reptiles, and fish of the park are also included.

Hardwoods have long been disposed of to create coniferous forests of high quality. Recently, there have been concerns that this policy is a mistake, not only because the demand for hardwoods is growing but because of the negative aspects of growing coniferous monocultures. This analysis examined hardwood inventory, ecology, management, and use issues through a summary of hardwood inventory in the Kamloops Forest Region, a field assessment of management practices and stand conditions in two subzones in the region, and a review of literature related to paper birch and black cottonwood, the predominant species in the productive subzones. The field assessment consisted of the sampling of regeneration stands younger than 20 years to identify management practices that were successful for hardwood, conifer, or mixedwood production. Immature-mature stands older than 20 years were sampled across a range of ecosystems to assess their stand structure, species composition, and growth and yield. BC FO LS PR SC

The availability of fibre from private land in Alberta has been largely ignored because of a surplus from public land. However, much of this surplus has been allocated in recent years, so that fibre from private land is quickly becoming a potentially important wood supply for primary forest products firms in Alberta. This study obtained information from 38 land owners in west-central Alberta through a personal interview survey conducted in May 1989. Respondents were asked questions on the physical characteristics of their land, production costs from harvesting, questions related to their socio-economic conditions, and uses of their forest lands. The study also used a model to evaluate the relative importance of a number of variables for their effect on a landowner's decision to supply fibre now and in the future. A discussion of market structures for private fibre is presented, with the presence of transactions costs to both landowners and firms in procuring private fibre analyzed in light of the modelling results. AL CA FO PR SC

The Skeena watershed represents one of the last major Pacific drainages where record size chinook and wild summer run steelhead can be found. Skeena steelhead populations are declining in spite of progressively more stringent angling regulations. This project was conducted to document the economic impacts of the Skeena freshwater sports fishery as one part of the broader multi-faceted resource and management picture. The study addresses economic impacts for 1990 and for angling in the Skeena watershed area only. Impacts are estimated for the province as a whole and a specifically defined local area, and for the freshwater component of the sport fishery. The study does not consider the potential of the sport fishery, nor does it consider the downward trends in use and impacts experienced in the past five years. Information sources included mail surveys of guides and anglers conducted for the study, B.C. This document describes the evaluation procedure developed to assess the economic potential of mineral exploration and mine development. It appraises the economic potential of mineral exploration and mine development in Manitoba, including the analysis of time trends. It also considers the impact of taxation of the economic potential, and examines Manitoba's competitive tax position in Canada. Finally, it analyzes the effects of possible changes in Manitoba's mining taxation policy on the province's competitive standing, and examines the ramifications of changes to Manitoba's mining taxation as proposed in the March 1992 budget.

L'Éducation française en Ontario à l'heure de l'immersion

par L.-G. Bordeleau...et al. Toronto : Conseil de l'éducation franco-ontarienne, 1988. ix, 301 p. Bibliogr. Résumé de la recherche (17 p.) inclus. ONTERIS: ON04820.
MICROLOG 92-07245 4 fiche

Cette recherche a exploré la spécificité respective de l'éducation française et de l'immersion et aussi un certain nombre de points d'impact de l'immersion sur l'éducation française. Le droit à l'éducation française est formellement acquis de la pré-maternelle à la fin du secondaire. L'éducation française se propose des objectifs d'apprentissage du français, langue maternelle et de l'intégration de la clientèle scolaire à la culture française en Ontario. L'immersion, de son côté, vise un apprentissage du français, comme langue seconde, doublé d'une certaine connaissance de la culture, véhiculée par cette langue. Les données recueillies, portant sur les différences et les ressemblances entre les 2 phénomènes, ont démontré des différences fondamentales, autant au plan des objectifs poursuivis que de la pédagogie et de la formation à l'enseignement. Quant à l'impact de l'immersion sur l'éducation française, l'étude révèle la possibilité d'un envahissement progressif des institutions franco-ontariennes scolaires, religieuses ou sociales par les nouveaux bilingues, issus des programmes d'immersion et on constate une attitude auto-dévalorisante chez les francophones, relative à leur langue, reliée à des facteurs sociaux divers et une certaine indifférence vis-à-vis les effets possibles d'assimilation que la cohabitation scolaire des deux groupes linguistiques produit. Des tableaux, des figures et des appendices complètent le document.

Describes current trends in videodisc use in education, gives examples of particular applications, and describes research done to evaluate them. Section 1 deals with videodiscs in military and industrial training, the basis for most videodisc research and development. This is different from traditional education because the goal is to teach specific skills as quickly as possible. The next 3 sections discuss videodisc applications in education in Canada, the U. S., and Great Britain. These projects are mainly trial applications in which videodiscs are tested for their effectiveness in specific courses. Section 5 looks at the use of videodiscs in health education. Their capacity to simulate reality makes them useful to the medical and health professions. Section 6 discusses their public use. The last section presents a discussion of the issues and concerns surrounding the integration of videodiscs into the learning process. It also suggests ways in which TVOntario could participate in the development of educational videodiscs.

Thread lubricants have been implicated in stress corrosion cracking (SCC) failures of bolting materials. Of particular concern to Bruce Nuclear Generating Station B is the large number of thread lubricants used at the station and the potential of some of these materials to promote SCC in steam or high temperature water pipe flange fasteners. Ten candidate thread lubricants for use in nuclear service were screened for SCC-promoting effects in tensioned ASTM A-193 B7 bolting. Fastener specimens were tensioned to 50% and 90% of yield strength to simulate moderate and high stress conditions and all fastener assemblies were aged at one time in a 300C

The Effect of cod end mesh size and shape on otter trawl performance

St. John's : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Fisheries and Habitat Management, Fisheries Development Division, 1991. 4 p. (Project summary ; no. 30)
MICROLOG 92-00005 1 fiche

Both the Harris report and the report of the Dunne Task Force highlighted the importance of increasing mesh size to facilitate escapement of immature fish of the northern cod stock. This report gives the results of an experiment comparing diamond and square mesh of different sizes conducted during a commercial fishing trip from November 29 to December 11, 1990. The traditional groundfish trawl (Engel High Lift) was modified to accommodate a trouser-type codend. Fish samples were taken from each side of the ramp on which the fish were landed. Lengths were taken in three centimeter groupings, and a minimum of 200 fish were sampled from each leg for each set. The total set catch (both legs combined after discarding) was estimated from the number of boxes of processed (heads-on gutted) fish in the hold.

Effect of cold stratification on the germination and growth of jack pine and black spruce

by L.J. Buse. Thunder Bay, Ont. : Ministry of Natural Resources, Northwestern Ontario Forest Technology Development Unit, 1992. v, 35 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr. (Technical report ; no. 67)
MICROLOG 92-06025 1 fiche

In an effort to improve the cost effectiveness of forest operations, seeding is gaining favour as a method of regenerating forest lands. Low survival rates, especially for black spruce, and the enormous quantities of seed used in operational seeding have resulted in increased efforts to find practical methods of improving seed use efficiency and post seeding survival. Stratification is used to overcome the internal dormancy exhibited by the seeds of some species. This study evaluates the effect of seed stratification on the germination and growth of jack pine and black spruce in the field; determines if seeding can be extended later into the summer using stratified seed; and determines the effect of shelter vs bare seeding on stratified seed. The report summarizes second and third year results of stratified seeding trials established north of Thunder Bay in 1989 and 1990. The trial included jack pine and black spruce; the use of shelter seed and bare seed; four stratification treatments in 1989 for 0, 7, 15, and 30 days and three stratification treatments in 1990 for 0, 7, and 15 days in 1990; and sowing dates in May, June, July, and August in 1989 and May, July and August in 1990.

The Effect of creative drama on student discipline, social maturity, and creative writing : final report

Contains the results of a 2-year study designed to measure the effects of a creative drama program on the behaviour and language skills of middle-school students. 1 gifted and 2 regular classes in grades 7 and 8 took part in the experimental program, and comparison classes were drawn from schools of similar socio-economic backgrounds. The content of the drama program was designed to open up students emotionally, socially, and physically, while building their language skills. Students took part in role-playing, creating, and improvising their own scenarios. A combination of behavioural, learning style, and creative writing measures were used, along with observation and interviews. It was apparent that there was a great deal of learning in the program, and that students enjoyed it. There was growth in their language skills, both written and oral. Group work encouraged greater integration between boys and girls. There was exceptional maturation in student behaviour, evident in their greater self-confidence, self-control, willingness to listen and cooperate, emotional expressiveness, and independence. Both students and teacher recognized student growth in language skills and maturity. Teachers also felt there was a professional development benefit for them, since the techniques and process used in the drama program had direct application to their teaching. The success of the program supports the argument for drama in education.

The Effect of dietary sulphur on available thiamine and disease related to thiamine deficiency : final report

The disease polyencephalomalacia has been produced in sheep following the administration of high levels of sulphur in the diet and there have been numerous reports of this disease in the field associated with high sulphate levels. However, it is not known what normal thiamine levels are in beef and dairy cattle. The study undertook surveys of cattle under differing management practices to ascertain their available and total thiamine levels. The studies included a demographic epidemiologic study, a cross-sectional study using beef cattle, and a cross-sectional study using dairy calves. A total of 71 farms, including both large feedlots and small producers, were used from north, central, and southern parts of the province. Drinking water from the farms was analyzed for sulphates and a total of 1,005 blood samples were taken. The demographic survey was conducted to gain knowledge concerning sulfate level in the water on Saskatchewan farms, to evaluate blood thiamine concentrations in the population of Saskatchewan cattle, and to locate farms with high (greater than 1000 ppm) and low (less than 200 ppm) levels of sulfate for the cross-sectional study.

Ontario Hydro treats its service water with sodium hypochlorite to a level not exceeding 2 ppm chlorine equivalents to prevent the infestation of the system by zebra mussels. At some facilities, this water is used to irrigate lawns and flower beds. This report presents the results of a greenhouse study designed to determine the effects of chlorination in impatiens, snapdragon, marigold, and a Kentucky bluegrass sod. The plants were irrigated with water containing 0, 1, 2, 5 and 10 ppm chlorine for 58 days. Weekly measurements of the height, bud number and flower production, and the final aboveground biomass were determined for the flowers. The effect of chlorine on the grass was determined by assessing the biomass of grass clippings made at three times during the study.

Effect of scarf joints on bending properties of laminated veneer lumber

Forintek Canada Corp. Eastern Laboratory. Ottawa : Forestry Canada ; Edmonton : Alberta Forestry, Lands and Wildlife, 1989. 7 p. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-662-17143-8 MICROLOG 92-03263 1 fiche

The laminated veneer lumber (LVL) industry is relatively new with a history of less than 20 years in large scale production. While LVL is stronger due to the many overlapping layers and can obtain higher yields than sawn lumber, it is also more expensive to produce. Veneers come in 8 ft or 4 ft lengths, and therefore end joints are necessary to produce longer structural members. Both scarf joints and butt joints are used to produce these longer members but the relative strength of each is not well known. This project was initiated to study the effect of scarf joints on the flatwise MOR of LVL. Aspen veneers used were obtained from a plywood mill in northern Ontario and were tested for bending strength in 13-ply, 7-ply, and 5-ply sizes with and without scarf joints.

The accidental introductions of at least three exotic European freshwater organisms in the Great Lakes in the 1980s by unintentional intercontinental transfers in the ballast water of ocean-going vessels led to guidelines being set into place on May 1, 1989, with the Canadian Coast Guard requesting voluntary exchange of ballast water of upbound ocean-going vessels in the open sea prior to arrival at the St. Lawrence Seaway. This report presents the results of a study of ballast water exchange and compliance rates based on foreign vessels entering the St. Lawrence Seaway between May and December 1990. The study determined the extent of compliance of inbound ocean-going vessels; established, using biological (planktonic) techniques, the effectiveness of open-ocean exchange of ballast water in reducing or eliminating the presence of freshwater and brackishwater organisms in ballast water scheduled for discharge in the Great Lakes and upper St. Lawrence River; determined the geographic and seasonal variations in the patterns of diversity, abundance, and density of foreign planktonic species arriving in ballast water; and assessed the relative level of risk that the organisms in non-exchanged ballast water and the residual organisms in exchanged water pose to the Great Lakes.

Effectiveness of the porous veneer intake in excluding fish at Darlington : sonar evaluations, year 1, 1990

by P.H. Patrick. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. iv, 46 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-36-K) MICROLOG 92-02015 1 fiche

The Darlington porous veneer intake was designed to reduce fish entrapment, with research in the laboratory indicating a capture/encounter ratio less than 5 percent for alewife and approximately 46 percent for yellow perch. Field evaluation of the veneer has not yet been conducted. This study was conducted to evaluate the effectiveness of the veneer in excluding fish by using sonar and fish impingement data; comparing sonar results with standard gill netting practices in estimating fish abundance, distribution, and behaviour, and demonstrating remote data transmission from the field to the laboratory for future assessments. Acoustic sampling was conducted June 12-14, July 23-25, and October 16-17 to assess the number of fish encounters and fish behaviour in the vicinity of the veneer. Continuously recorded sonar data were collected during both day and night periods using four transducers multiplexed at regular intervals covering both porous and non-porous sections. Paired gill nets were also set to the east and west of the veneer.

Proceedings of a conference, which included over 30 invited papers, 27 other papers and 15 abstracts from over 40 volunteer posters. The conference reviewed the current state of knowledge on the effects of acid deposition on forest resources, with special reference to the north temperate and boreal forests of eastern North America, and broadened the awareness of acid deposition effects, including those of oxidants and heavy metals, in the North American forest community. Relevant Scandinavian and central European experience is also included. Technical sessions were devoted to the effects of acid rain on forest vegetation, pollutant deposition to forest ecosystems, effects of acid rain on soil processes, implications of acid rain for forest ecosystems, and a field tour of catchment basins.

The Effects of different fishing methods on the mortality of eastern oysters Crassostrea virginica

by T.W. Stephen and T. Landry. Moncton, N.B. : Dept. of Fisheries and Oceans, Gulf Region, Science Branch, 1992. v, 10 p. Bibliogr. (Canadian technical report of fisheries and aquatic sciences ; no. 1862) ISSN 0706-6457

The public fishing grounds and picking areas are the most important sources of legal size eastern oysters for the leasehold relay and market fisheries in P.E.I. and New Brunswick. This study examined the effects of hand picking and tonging harvesting methods on the mortality of intertidal oysters and the survival of oyster spat settling on the oyster cultch. Two experiments were set up adjacent to one another in a sheltered cove in the North River, P.E.I. in early July 1990. The first experiment involved hand picking and compared the effects of crawling and walking while hand picking oysters, and of tonging them from a dory. The second experiment examined the survival of oyster spat settling onto naturally occurring cultch that was disturbed and exposed by the tonging process.

Effects of male precocity on progeny of rainbow trout

MICROLOG 92-00823 1 fiche

In the intensive trout farming of the GDR, precocious males in the first year of life occur with weights from 50-200 grams. Their reproductive maturation depresses their growth, increases mortality and aggressiveness, impairs the quality of the meat and means they reach market at a later time, leading to higher economic cost. At the same time, they also yield fertile sperm with the same concentration and motility as sperm of normal males, making their use as breeding stock very economical. This paper attempts to determine whether the incidence of male precocity is controlled by environmental factors or whether it is a fixed hereditary feature of the genotype.

Effects of neighbourhood planning on housing quality in Edmonton

This study evaluated the effects of four neighbourhood plans produced and implemented with extensive citizen participation. The plans represented the efforts of residents to prevent the wholesale redevelopment of their neighbourhoods and to promote, instead, an alternative form of revitalization based on preservation and renovation of the family housing stock, mainly single-detached and semi-detached housing. The neighbourhoods in Edmonton selected for study were Groat Estate and Riverdale, for which plans were approved in 1977, and Oliver and Garneau, for which plans were approved in 1981 and 1982 respectively. The report includes a review of the methodology and research methods used, a history of development trends and issues in each of the study areas; analyses of data taken from the tax assessment records of the City of Edmonton and from the census of Canada from 1971-86, plus some supplementary data from residents in the study areas; and an analysis of the impact of the respective neighbourhood plans on various development issues.

Effects of piped median vs. open ditch drainage on stormwater quality

by F.I. Lorant. Downsview, Ont. : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1992. ii, 32 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-04834 1 fiche

Environmental regulatory agencies have expressed concern about the quality of receiving water and the associated downstream effects when piped and paved median drainage systems are installed on major freeways or expressways. This project prepared a literature review on stormwater quality in highway runoff using work published since 1980, and conducted a field study for a specific site, examining the relative water quality effects of both piped and grassed drainage channels. Two sites were selected along Highway 401, a grassed median section near the Dorchester

Swamp and a paved section over Putnam Road. Eight composite samples were collected and analyzed for metals, pH, conductivity, total suspended solids, BOD, COD, fecal coliforms, and pesticides between November 1989 and December 1990, although the grassed channel width was reduced during the early part of the monitoring program by urgent, safety-related road improvement works. This report presents the results of the analysis.

In late spring and summer of 1991 a 60-day environmental impact study was conducted on the suitability of scrap automobile tires as an artificial reef construction medium. The study determined if the tires are capable of leaching contaminants into water, if chemicals or metals are subject to uptake by fish, and if the water used in the study possessed any factors which might be toxic to aquatic organisms. Two sets of three 450 litre tanks were set up using water from the Bay of Quinte. Tanks contained either complete tires or cut-up tires. Three of the tanks contained 75 goldfish each, while the other three tanks did not. The water from the fishless tanks was sent for toxicity testing using protocols for rainbow trout (Salmo gairdneri) and water fleas (Daphnia magna).

Ce phénomène simple se complique en raison du fait que le champ magnétique varie constamment en intensité et en direction, ce qui entraîne une variation correspondante de l'orientation de l'aiguille de la boussole. Il existe par conséquent une incertitude fondamentale dans la navigation à la boussole qui peut être importante ou non, selon son application par l'utilisateur. Cet opuscule décrit certains aspects du champ magnétique qui peuvent avoir un effet sur la navigation à la boussole ainsi que la façon d'apporter une correction pour tenir compte de ces effets et obtenir quand même une direction exacte.

On a mesuré une hausse d'environ 4 p. 100 de la concentration du gaz carbonique au cours des années 70 uniquement et de 8 p. 100 au cours des 25 dernières années, ce qui suppose un accroissement de 20 à 30 p. 100 depuis le début de l'ère industrielle. Cette étude a pour but l'amélioration des connaissances concernant les risques environnementaux pour la faune avienne de trois insecticides utilisés au Québec. Les produits à l'étude sont l'azinfos-méthyl, le malathion et le carbofuran, insecticides appliqués sur les cultures de la fraise et de la pomme. Différentes méthodes furent essayées sur le terrain afin d'atteindre ce but. En premier lieu, une justification des choix d'insecticides et de cultures est présentée ainsi qu'une description des sites d'étude. Également, il y a lieu de décrire l'état actuel de l'usage de ces pesticides au Québec et leur écotoxicologie. Ensuite, les méthodes utilisées sont décrites en détail ainsi que les résultats obtenus. L'interprétation des résultats permet d'évaluer les risques environnementaux pour le contexte québécois en ce qui concerne les insecticides et les cultures étudiées. Finalement, quelques recommandations concernant les méthodes utilisées lors des travaux sur le terrain sont émises.

L'objectif de ce mémoire est d'analyser les implications de la déréglementation sur les coûts de l'industrie du transport aérien. Le mémoire comporte quatre parties. La première tente de définir le cadre organisationnel et institutionnel de la réglementation, en mettant en relief l'aspect de la théorie réglementaire et les conséquences résultant de cette option. La deuxième porte sur les développements théoriques et empiriques liés à l'analyse des fonctions de coût. Une revue critique des études empiriques faites sur la structure de l'industrie du transport aérien est également abordée dans cette partie. La troisième partie porte sur la présentation de l'analyse empirique, en définissant les méthodes d'estimation économétriques retenues. Cette partie débouche sur la présentation et la définition opérationnelle des variables qui entrent dans la fonction de coût. La quatrième partie présente et analyse les résultats économétriques obtenus pour l'industrie canadienne. Ces derniers sont ensuite comparés aux résultats obtenus par d'autres études afin de préciser s'il y a lieu, des différences de structure entre les résultats.

Functional single linear recursions are single linear recursions with function symbols. This paper studies the compilation and efficient evaluation of functional single linear recursions in deductive databases and shows that a functional single linear recursion can be rectified to a function-free single linear recursion, which can then be compiled to a highly regular form (a bounded, or an n-chain recursion). Compilation greatly facilitates the analysis of such recursions. By incorporating finiteness and monotonicity constraints, a large class of functional single linear recursions can be analyzed and evaluated efficiently in deductive databases.

Ontario Hydro safety specifications limited approach to 4.58 m. This report presents the results of a series of tests of manlift devices at 4.58 m from live conductors energized at voltages representative of those on the 500 kV transmission system. For each test, the electrical environment and selected voltages and currents on the devices were measured. The report presents the measurements and the observed performance of the manlift devices.

The Standing Committee On Educational Technology (SCOET) initiated the Electronic Communications Project because the communications technologies which currently interconnect the colleges and institutes do not satisfy the needs of the system in an effective, flexible manner. Most of the hardware and software being used is outdated and is not equipped to take advantage of the significant changes which are occurring. This report is an inventory of the technologies which affect the college and institute system's ability to communicate electronically. The entire system was surveyed for information about primary computing platforms, external communications links, access to and use of electronic mail, and the presence or absence of computer conferencing facilities. Access to basic information systems such as student records, library cataloguing, and budgeting systems was also surveyed.

Embedded fiber optic strain sensors for reinforced plastics and elastomeric materials

MICROLOG 92-04233 2 fiche

As reinforced plastics and elastomers are used in critical components of the negative pressure containment safety systems of the CANDU nuclear generating station, a method of monitoring the response of these materials to operational and extraordinary loads, and thereby determining their deterioration, would be highly advantageous. Such a method, which has received wide application in the aerospace industry, is embedded fiber optic strain sensors. In this study, interferometric-based and attenuation-based fiber optic strain sensors were studied in a rigid material such as fiberglass reinforced plastic (FRP) and a flexible material such as polyester fabric reinforced silicone rubber. For the interferometric sensors, a Mach-Zehnder interferometric technique was used. Specimens of FRP and silicone rubber were made with interferometric sensors embedded, the procedure for which is described in detail. The response of the sensors to tensile loads was then measured. An electronic fringe counter was required for the interferometric sensors and the design and construction of this is described in detail.

Énoncé des lacunes révisé concernant l'étude d'impact environnemental des activités militaires aériennes au Labrador et au Québec

Canada. Commission d'évaluation environnementale au sujet des activités de vol militaire au Labrador et au Québec. Ottawa : la Commission, 1991. 36, 34 p. Bilingue (Revised deficiency statement respecting...). MICROLOG 92-01815 1 fiche

L'examen de l'Énoncé des incidences environnementales a pour but de permettre à la Commission de déterminer si ce dernier respecte chacune des exigences des directives pour la préparation d'un énoncé des incidences environnementales de certaines activités aériennes militaires se déroulant au Labrador et au Québec. En révisant l'Énoncé des lacunes, la Commission a évalué deux aspects, soit les lacunes des 38 lacunes se rapportaient spécifiquement à l'Élément 2 du projet et devaient être éliminées et, à la lumière d'une portée réduite du projet, déterminer si d'autres lacunes devraient également être modifiées ou éliminées.

In 1985, eight streams with hatchery, wild, and enhanced coho populations were chosen for an index study along the east coast of Vancouver Island. Of the selected systems, five had established hatchery facilities and three (Black Creek, French Creek, and the Trent River) were natural systems. Each fall since 1985, adult counting fences were operated on these three streams for enumeration of coho escapements and mark-recapture studies were also carried out as a second escapement estimate. In the spring of each year, smolt enumeration fences were used to monitor and coded-wire tag the outmigrating coho smolts. This report presents the results of the 1989 coho smolt enumeration program conducted at Black Creek, French Creek, and the Trent River to document the size and age distributions of the smolt outmigrations from each system; obtain results which will enable an examination of the relationship between adult escapement and smolt production; coded-wire tag various smolt migration timing and size groups; and evaluate the effectiveness of fry outplanting.

In June 1988, City Resources (Canada) Ltd. submitted a Stage II report outlining the proposed development of an open pit gold mine (Cinola Gold Project) on Graham Island, Queen Charlotte Islands, B.C. The mine would be located within the Yakoun River drainage, which has significant fishery resources. As part of a Cinola Gold Project pre-development data collection program, a monitoring program was undertaken in August and September 1988 using in situ caged juvenile coho salmon to establish baseline conditions from which to assess the effects on fish of potentially elevated environmental metal levels and other changes in water quality resulting from future mining activity. Water and sediment samples were collected in order to characterize the study streams and feral juvenile coho salmon were also sampled to compare to the caged salmon. This report presents the results of these studies.

Ottawa : Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, 1992. 12 p. French ed. (Évaluation environnementale : projet...) on the same fiche. MICROLOG 92-06365 1 fiche

The Canadian Parks Service took over the Lachine Canal development in the 1970s and proposed a plan for its development. It was then found that the canal was highly contaminated so development was suspended until the contamination problem was resolved. The decontamination project was referred to a federal-provincial environmental assessment panel for public review. The panel addressed the transport of water or sediment from the Lachine Basin or Lake Saint-Louis into the canal, contaminant loadings from waste water and run off into the canal, and the level of contamination of the shorelines and possibility of contaminant migration by ground water. This report informs the panel of the status of activities on the canal decontamination project, including the impact statement and gives a socioeconomic analysis and study of potential use of the canal; characterization of the site; an analysis of external factors such as shoreline contamination and waste water and runoff; the technical documentation on the decontamination technology alternative; and the status in terms of the guidelines.

The Stone-Consolidated Inc. mill in Bathurst, New Brunswick currently produces approximately 30 cu m of biomass ash daily as a result of burning hog fuel (wood debris and bark) in the mill's boilers. The ash has traditionally been disposed of on Stone property to the immediate south of the existing mill. The present ash disposal site is near capacity and continued operation will require additional land which is not available at the present site. In early 1990, Stone began to locate and design a new ash disposal site and to prepare closure plans for the existing ash disposal site. The new site is located on Stone property to the immediate south of the existing disposal area. This report presents the results of the environmental impact assessment of the new site, including a description of the project, the existing environment (climate, geology, hydrogeology, surface water, biological and terrestrial resources, terrestrial ecosystems, ecological reserves and critical natural areas, socioeconomic setting), the impact assessment and mitigation; and monitoring and compensation.

Cameco Corp. and Uranerz Exploration and Mining are involved in a joint venture to mine three new uranium ore bodies at the Rabbit Lake operation in northern Saskatchewan. Rabbit Lake has been in operation for 17 years. In 1987 an environmental impact statement for the mining of the new ore bodies was submitted to the regulatory agencies. After an extensive review, including a public review, the Saskatchewan Government issued its approval to proceed. In 1991, the Atomic Energy Control Board decided that there was sufficient public concern to warrant referral to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office for a panel hearing before proceeding to full production. As a result, the original Environmental Impact Statement was revised to include additional data accumulated over the past four years and to re-assess the socio-economic impacts to reflect economic changes during the period. This report summarizes the new information available, including describing the project, detailing the operations at Eagle Point, and the methods of disposing of the tailings. The environmental impacts, both current and long-term, on the air and water are described and mitigative measures are given. Facilities required, health and safety considerations, and decommissioning are detailed, as are the socio-economic impacts, both positive and negative.

Report of a study on the environmental impact of vegetation management methods in a mixedwood cutover carried out from 1985-90. Vegetation management treatments included two rates of a granular formulation of the active ingredient (ai) hexazinone (PRONONE 10G, 2 and 4 kg ai/ha) and mechanical methods (double disk, disk trenching, brush saw) for site preparation and crop release. The impact of these methods on the vegetation composition, structure and dynamics was evaluated and data was developed for environmental impact, and residue and fate of hexazinone using residue analysis techniques. Herbicide application technology was also evaluated and the influence of hexazinone application was determined on the nutrient dynamics in plants and soil and mycorrhizae. Site preparation treatments were applied in the fall of 1986 and crop release treatments in the spring of 1989. Results presented in this report are mainly applicable to site preparation treatments involving fall application of PRONONE 10G and spring application of mechanical treatments.

by G.J. Wall. Toronto : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1991. iv, 42 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-00443 1 fiche

This study examines the effects of long term storage of topsoil and the reconsolidation of subsoil on soil erodibility values. The study approach included both the prediction and measurement of soil erodibilities under simulated and natural highway construction conditions. The soil erodibility prediction equation was used to predict changes in soil erodibility for 15 hypothetical soil materials when the permeability and structural input data were varied from minimum to maximum values. Measurements of runoff and soil losses were taken from study plots on highway construction locations to establish the relative erodibility of soil stockpiled for top dressing or reconsolidated subsoil materials. In 1984, the Geraldton District purchased brushsaws and stump applicators for operational hand tending purposes. A study was initiated to compare the effectiveness of Roundup and 2,4-D as a method of stump treatment; and to study the effect of various concentrations of Roundup and 2,4-D on undesired competition. The study area is located northwest of Nakina, Ontario in the Esnagami Road Reserve. The site was logged using the conventional cut and skid method in 1978, then scarified in 1979. In spring 1980 it was planted with black spruce. At the initiation of this study four years later, the plantation was in need of tending. In late July 1984, ten treatment plots were established. Ten subplots were systematically located near the centre of each plot to provide a treatment zone around the subplots to minimize the possibility of herbicides translocating to adjoining subplots through the root systems of adjacent stems. ## Estimating testing effectiveness of the circular self-test path technique -- Rev.

This paper studies the effectiveness of a random built-in self-test technique for VLSI circuits. The technique, called the circular self-test path (STP), is applicable to circuits that consist of combinational blocks and registers. The paper particularly examines the effectiveness of test pattern generation and test response compaction and fault coverage. The test generation effectiveness is evaluated by the fraction of all possible test patterns applied during a testing session to the circuit under test. The compaction effectiveness of the STP technique is measured by the probability of aliasing, and fault coverage by the fraction of all permanent faults that are detected. For all these measures, simple formulae are developed that give very accurate estimations without detailed circuit simulation. To demonstrate their accuracy, the estimates obtained by the formulae are compared to the results obtained by extensive simulation experiments.

Estimation of angler effort using index boat counts

Aerial boat counts are conducted in B.C. as part of the Small Lakes Index Management (SLIM) program, a data collection system which involves collection of a minimum of CPUE, fish size, fish age, and growth rate data from angler interviews, and effort data from aerial counts. The aerial boat count program monitors a standard index of angler activity by capturing instantaneous boat counts at a single time strata (midday on weekends) through the summer (open water) angling season on 400 lakes. This paper used historic angler activity survey data from 19 lakes with complete or near complete season coverage gathered from regional sources to improve the estimates of total angler effort that are generated from boat counts made from the SLIM program single time strata sampling. Relationships between boat counts and total summer angler effort as determined by intensive angler activity survey projects are investigated using four different stratification schemes in the analysis (all counts, by daytype, by month, by month and daytype).

Results of the latter stratification were used for further analysis.

Estimation of lung tissue doses following exposure to low-LET radiation in the Canadian study of cancer following multiple fluoroscopies

by G.R. Howe and M. Yaffe. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1992. iii, 49 p. Bibliogr. (Research report , INFO-0405) MICROLOG 92-07352 1 fiche

Lung tissue doses from exposure to external low-LET radiation were estimated for each year between 1930-69 for 92,707 tuberculosis patients first treated in Canadian institutions from 1930-52. A substantial proportion of these patients received multiple chest fluoroscopies in conjunction with treatment by artificial pneumothorax, and thus accumulated lung tissue doses up to 15.7 grays. The dose estimation model included the radiation output of fluoroscopes derived from experimental measurements; organ dose per air kerma at the skin entrance estimated from a combination of previously conducted human phantom experiments and new Monte Carlo simulations; and parameters of exposure estimated from interviews with 91 physicians who conducted the procedure in the suitable timeframe. The final component of the dose model was the estimation for each individual patient of the number of fluoroscopies received as a function of calendar year, and whether or not the institution in question was in the province of Nova Scotia. This report describes the methodology and then summarizes the results

Les recherches que la Commission royale a commandées sur l'éthique politique visaient à évaluer les normes de comportement politique par rapport à la démocratie électorale, et à attirer l'attention sur les valeurs et principes qui sont perçus comme caractérisant les normes de conduite les plus élevées. Ce document se penche donc sur l'éthique et la politique au Canada. Il porte une attention toute particulière sur les points suivants: les enjeux éthiques de la réforme électorale au Canada - une analyse éthologique, l'éthique du secteur public; les allégations d'abus d'influence dans le cadre de la politique canadienne; la publicité électorale négative - une analyse des résultats de recherche à la lumière des pratiques au Canada; la citoyenneté et l'équité - les variations dans l'espace et le temps; justice, équité et droits, et, un code d'éthique pour les partis politiques.

Ethnic variations in fertility : microeconomic and minority group status effects

1990. 23 p. Bibliogr. (Research discussion paper ; no. 72) ISSN 0317-2473
MICROLOG 92-06289 1 fiche

This study examines the fertility of the Chinese and the Portuguese in Canada to test two versions of the minority group status hypothesis in the context of microeconomic effects. It hypothesizes that for the Chinese, the effects of gains in socioeconomic status would serve to reduce their fertility since they do not possess a particularized pronatalist ideology discouraging the use of efficient contraception. For the Portuguese, it predicts that since they share a strong Catholic doctrine, the effects of gains in average family size is strong.

Concern regarding forest decline is centred on the effects of acid precipitation on sugar maple.
In 1984, the Acidic Precipitation in Ontario (APIOS) office formed a multidisciplinary research team to conduct an etiological study of sugar maple decline at selected sites.
Some facets of the study initiated in 1984 are ongoing, but the objectives established for the etiological study have been addressed and the work completed in 1990. This document is the final report of the study. Intensive study was conducted at 11 woodlots from three different regions. The report also includes background information on the etiology of maple decline, the effects of long-range atmospheric pollutants, the major hypotheses of forest decline, and regional atmospheric pollution gradients in Ontario. Remedial actions are also included.

Ce document présente un compte rendu des résultats de l'enquête réalisée en 1985 sur la promotion de la santé au Canada en ce qu'ils ont trait à divers indicateurs d'une position socio-économique défavorisée. L'analyse porte sur l'état de santé et la qualité de vie, les facteurs de risque associés aux maladies cardiovasculaires et à d'autres problèmes de santé, ainsi que sur les connaissances, les croyances et les attitudes rattachées à la santé. Pour chaque question, les perspectives sociales et économiques sont présentées par rapport à l'âge, au sexe, à la région, à la langue maternelle, au niveau d'instruction, au niveau de revenu, à l'activité principale, à la profession et à une expérience de chômage prolongé. Les conséquences possibles de ces résultats sont examinées.

L'Enquête Promotion Santé contient sept thèmes qui se prêtent à l'établissement de relations entre certaines mesures de croyances, d'attitudes ou de perceptions du comportement des amis ou des membres de la famille, et le comportement avoué. Il s'agit de l'usage du tabac, de la consommation d'alcool, de l'usage de la marijuana, de l'auto-examen des seins, de la vérification de la tension artérielle, de l'exercice et des intentions de changer un comportement. Pour chacun, on examine la pertinence des relations établies, on analyse leur importance et, finalement, on décrit les conséquences possibles de ces relations sur le plan de la promotion de la santé. Les tableaux présentent les relations établies tant au niveau de l'ensemble des répondants que des hommes et des femmes considérés séparément

Ce rapport a pour but de présenter certains des résultats de l'Enquête Promotion Santé Canada - une enquête téléphonique menée à l'échelle du pays en 1985. Il porte sur les adultes canadiens (âgés de 15 ans et plus) qui se disent limités dans l'exercice de leurs activités à cause d'un problème de santé chronique. On y compare les attitudes, les opinions, les connaissances et les comportements relatifs à la santé des Canadiens limités dans l'exercice de leurs activités avec ceux du reste de la population adulte. A cause des différences d'âge considérables entre les deux groupes (les personnes atteintes d'une incapacité étant plus âgées), toutes les comparaisons ont été ajustées en fonction de l'âge (c.-à-d. normalisées selon l'âge)

L'Enquête Promotion Santé Canada (EPS), menée en 1985, vise l'élaboration d'une politique nationale de promotion de la santé. Cette enquête fournit de l'information sur les attitudes, les comportements touchant la santé, les croyances et les pratiques des Canadiens en matière de santé. On y examine quelques-uns des résultats de l'EPS chez les Canadiens qui forment la main-d'oeuvre active. De plus, on y discute en outre de l'incidence de ces constatations sur les programmes de promotion de la santé en milieu de travail, et on se penche particulièrement sur : l'état de santé, la limitation de l'activité; les comportements à risque sur le plan de la santé; et les répercussions sur les programmes

Près de 200 femmes purgent une peine d'une durée de plus de deux ans dans la collectivité en semi-liberté, en libération conditionnelle totale et en liberté surveillées. En raison du nombre restreint de maisons de transition, les installations offertes à ces femmes sont très limitées, notamment à l'étape de la semi-liberté. Ce document présente les résultats d'une étude sur la mise en liberté faisant suite à un sondage auprès des femmes purgeant une peine d'une durée de plus de deux ans dans la collectivité.

Cette étude avait pour objet, de déterminer les connaissances, les attitudes et les comportements des jeunes Canadiens, vis-à-vis du syndrome d'immunodéficience acquise (SIDA) et des autres maladies, transmissibles sexuellement (MTS). Les questionnaires utilisés, comprenaient des questions sur les sujets suivants : les antécédents des répondants (âge, sexe, cadre de vie), leurs sources d'information principales et préférées, à propos de la sexualité, de la conception, du SIDA et des autres MTS, leurs comportements (consommation d'alcool, de cigarettes et de cannabis, activités sexuelles), leurs connaissances à propos du SIDA et des autres MTS; relations avec les parents et avec les camarades; estime de soi; santé mentale, attitude à l'endroit des personnes, atteintes du SIDA ou infectées par le HIV; et attitude à l'égard de l'homosexualité. Les résultats nationaux de l'enquête, menée auprès de 38 002 jeunes Canadiens (élèves entre 11 et 21 ans), ont montré que : plus de 70 pour cent des personnes interrogées, voulaient savoir davantage sur le SIDA, et que les jeunes étaient mal renseignés, sur les graves complications que pouvaient entraîner les MTS lorsqu'elles n'étaient pas diagnostiquées assez rapidement et que la connaissance du SIDA n'a pas eu d'effets positifs, sur les attitudes des jeunes, à l'endroit des personnes, atteintes de cette maladie ou infectées par le HIV. ### Evaluation de l'utilisation de la télédétection comme outil d'inventaire des habitats de reproduction de la bécasse d'Amérique Scolopax minor par M. Babin et R. Couture. Québec : Gouvernement du Québec, Ministère du loisir de la chasse et de la pêche, Direction de la gestion des espèces et des habitats, 1987. x, 72 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ISBN 2-550-18571-4 MICROLOG 92-03010 1 fiche

Le taux d'abondance de la population de Bécasse d'Amérique de la région de l'est tend à diminuer depuis 1965 à un rythme moyen de 2,7 pour cent par année. L'abondance de bécasses est reliée à la quantité d'habitats disponibles. Par conséquent, le besoin d'élaborer une procédure d'inventaire des habitats de la bécasse a conduit à évaluer l'utilisation de la télédétection à cette fin. Ce document porte sur ce projet qui vise à évaluer l'utilisation de la télédétection pour repérer l'habitat de reproduction de la Bécasse d'Amérique.

Le cancer étant une maladie qui suscite bien des craintes, ce document tente de faire la lumière sur le sujet et explique ce que signifient les termes 'cancer' et 'cancérogène', et montre de quelle façon la capacité d'une substance chimique ou d'un produit quelconque de provoquer le cancer chez les humains ou chez les animaux peut être évaluée et comment les autorités chargées de la réglementation utilisent les preuves données concernant le pouvoir cancérogène d'un produit pour élaborer les règlements destinés à protéger la santé publique. Le document examine précisément les domaines suivants l'épidémiologie; le choix des substances chimiques à soumettre aux bio-essais de cancérogénèse; l'exécution du bio-essai de cancérogénèse; la détermination des expositions humaines; et, l'interprétation et l'évaluation des données sur la cancérogénèse.

Dans le cadre de ses initiatives sur la réforme du divorce, le ministère de la Justice a attribué des fonds pour étudier et évaluer la Loi sur le divorce. Pour les besoins de l'évaluation, il s'agissait surtout de savoir si on avait atteint ces objectifs et quels étaient les résultats et les conséquences imprévus de la nouvelle loi sur le divorce. L'évaluation s'est faite en deux étapes. Au cours de la première étape, on a recueilli des données sur 1 310 causes de divorce dans quatre villes du Canada. St. John's, Montréal, Ottawa et Saskatoon. La seconde étape était à peu près identique à la première c'est-à-dire qu'au cours de l'automne de 1988, on a étudié 1 478 dossiers de divorce et interviewé 599 personnes divorcées ou en instance de divorce, aux quatre endroits précités. Ce document présente les résultats de l'étape II 'Contrôle et évaluation, de l'évaluation de la Loi sur le divorce'.

Dans le cadre du Plan d'action Saint-Laurent, une entente de coopération scientifique et technique en matière de télédétection appliquée au fleuve Saint-Laurent a été conclue en 1989 entre le Centre Saint-Laurent (CSL) et le Centre canadien de télédétection (CCT). Cette entente triennale vise à utiliser la télédétection aéroportée et spatiale à des fins de suivi environnemental du fleuve. Les principaux objectifs de cette entente sont d'évaluer la capacité des capteurs à reconnaître les éléments indicateurs de la pollution et de l'état du milieu et d'informer les gestionnaires du Plan d'action Saint-Laurent des possibilités de la télédétection appliquée à la gestion de l'environnement. On y aborde le matériel utilisé, la méthodologie, la description des variables indicatrices de la qualité des eaux, et les résultats et analyses des résultats.

L'évaluation des effets à moyen terme (sept à neuf ans) de l'entretien des plantations d'épinettes noires aux phénoxys et au glyphosate sur les communautés avienennes a été réalisée en période de reproduction dans les régions du Bas Saint-Laurent et de la Gaspésie au Québec. L'étude a porté sur quatre peuplements végétaux dont la faune avienne en reproduction a été inventoriée au printemps 1988. Il s'agit tout d'abord d'évaluer les modifications des peuplements forestiers après cinq à dix années de croissance suite au traitement avec des phytocides. On compare la diversité de la stratification végétale, le recouvrement de la végétation et la composition floristique de sites traités avec phytocides à des sites non traités. Par la suite, on vérifie si les modifications des habitats forestiers ont apporté des changements au niveau des communautés avienennes en évaluant la diversité, densité, dominance et variété pour chacun des sites.

Concerns over the environmental impact and costs of the brush-rake and burn method of site preparation have led to the implementation of alternatives methods which leave slash on-site. Trials involving some of these methods indicate there are viable alternatives in certain conditions. Recently, brush-cutting heads have been mounted on excavators and used in site preparation and stand conversions. This type of equipment is capable of shredding both standing material and felled slash. This report summarizes the results of the trial completed in September 1991 to determine the productivity and effectiveness of a Denis-Cimaf TRH-150 brush-cutter.

This report presents a comprehensive review of advanced industrial materials and their associated technologies as they apply to the Canadian Buoyage Systems. The report covers all the major methods of fabrication technologies for composite materials of fibre-reinforced plastics for buoy design. An extensive literature search was conducted to find relevant technologies that could be applied to the manufacture of buoys with advanced materials. To better understand the problem, site visits of various Coast Guard bases were conducted. To address these problems, a portfolio of conceptual designs and a technology assessment of the use of advanced materials in navigational buoy design was developed.

The system is based on the use of one or more wind turbines to charge storage batteries, and the synchronization of an AC inverter output with one or two diesel generating sets, to provide full-time utility grade power making full use of available wind energy. The report presents an example of a design and an analysis of its operation using historical information for the site, to evaluate the new concept from a technical, operational and economic perspective. A qualitative examination of environmental benefits which may result is also performed.

Integrated gasification combined cycle (IGCC) is potentially the technology of choice for the next generation of coal-fired power plants. Existing gasification technologies are based on fixed, fluidized, or entrained bed reactors operating at various reactor conditions. The suitability of a certain coal for a particular technology may depend on its physical and chemical properties. This study was performed to obtain an initial assessment of the suitability of Byron Creek (Esso Resources Canada Ltd.), Highvale (TransAlta Utilities Corp.), Paint Earth (Alberta Power Ltd.), Genesee (Edmonton Power Ltd.), Costello (Prairie Coal Ltd.), and Minto (New Brunswick Power) coals for the Dow gasification procedure. Performance estimates included heat and mass balances around the IGCC plant and prediction of the gasifier product gas composition. No gasification or coal/water slurry preparation experiments were performed during these evaluations. This report gives the results of the tests.

The strategy for each group of greenhouse gases is being overseen by a steering committee. This project developed a list of potential measures and technologies that can reduce net CO2 emissions and evaluated those measures for technical abatement potential, cost-effectiveness, and non-economic or institutional considerations. The results of the assessment are then used as a basis on which to categorize measures according to overall ease of adoption. The report also contains a discussion of the general methodology and definitions used. The study focuses on the main sources and sink of carbon dioxide in the province, including forests and forest management, pulp and paper, road transportation, residential, and electricity generation.

Evaluation of evaporative losses of fog water collected with the Caltech active fog water sampler

by R. Taylor. Toronto Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. 9 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-173-K)
MICROLOG 92-03492 1 fiche

The Caltech active fog water sampler has been used to sample winter fogs in connection with the insulator icing problem. Fog water is collected by inertial impaction of fog droplets on a screen of Teflon strings, with the collected fog water conductivity depending on the characteristics of the 'fog system' (liquid water content, the droplet size distribution, the saturation of air with water vapour, the temperature, and wind velocity). The sample collection step, too, could influence the observed fog water conductivity. The evaporation of water while it resides on the screens was suggested as a particular source of error. This report evaluates the effect of any evaporative losses by the collection process through the use of artificial fogs of known conductivity under controlled conditions. The report outlines the performance conditions and results.

This report examines the effects of fuel type, facility, and operating parameters on SO<sub>2</sub> and NO<sub>x</sub> emissions from three bubbling fluidized bed combustion (FBC) pilot plants, two circulating FBC pilot plants and an industrial bubbling FBC heating plant. The relationship between the NO<sub>x</sub> and CO emissions, the NO<sub>x</sub> and SO<sub>2</sub> emissions, and the SO<sub>2</sub> and CO emissions were also examined. Data are summarized from the results of 40 separate test programs providing information for 12 coals, a coal-water slurry, three cokes and four heavy oils.

Evaluation of technology for the treatment of waste sludge and solids contaminated with salt, metals, and hydrocarbons -- Update

In 1989, Phase I of a study was conducted on treatment technologies capable of treating sludges and solids contaminated with fine particles, salt, oil, and heavy metals generated by conventional oil production operations. In the light of other waste characterization and technology assessment work carried out by the Canadian Petroleum Association (CPA) recently, it was decided that the Phase I report should be updated. This document assesses those technologies presented in a 1990 report which may have application in treating the wastes addressed in the Phase I report. This update assesses an additional 22 processes for potential suitability to treat the wastes dealt with earlier. After preliminary screening, a detailed evaluation was conducted for the ASTCO-STS process, RTR/Gulf process, Aqua-Guard Thermal Oxidizer, B.E.S.T. process, BP Soil Solvent Extraction, and Taciuk processor.

Evaluation of technology for the treatment of waste sludge and solids contaminated with salt, metals, and hydrocarbons : phase I report

Calgary, Alta. : Canadian Petroleum Association ; Ottawa : Environment Canada, Conservation and Protection, 1989. xii, 203 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-02791 3 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Although existing waste treatment and disposal methods used by the industry are adequate for some of the wastes considered in this study, they are either not appropriate or not economically feasible when the wastes contain fine particle-sized solids and a wide range of contaminants such as oil, salt, and heavy metals. A study was conducted to identify treatment technologies capable of treating these hydrocarbon-contaminated solids and sludges. Phase I is a global assessment of existing and emerging treatment technologies capable of handling wastes containing a wide range of contaminants and a significant portion of fine particles within the current and anticipated provincial and federal regulatory framework. The types of waste considered are generated in both conventional and heavy oil production operations and include storage tank bottom sludge, waste holding pond or pit sludge, emergency storage pit sludge, flare pit sludge, treater and skim tank interface pads, field tank sands, free water knockout and treater desand sludges, slop oil or sludges, ecology pit mixture, and spill debris. The study reviewed federal, provincial and U.S. waste management legislation as well. It identified 32 treatment processes in the general categories of solvent extraction, aqueous extraction or leaching, thermal treatment, biodegradation treatment, and in situ treatment and evaluated 16 processes in further detail.

CANDU reactors use fuel rods that are composed of pressed UO<sub>2</sub> pellets containing 235U in natural ratios with 238U. After use, the spent unprocessed fuel is stored in temporary facilities. This report investigates the assumption of congruent dissolution of spent unprocessed fuel by examining the published scientific literature on uranium ore bodies to decide whether it is valid to model the dissolution of fuel rods by the dissolution of uraninite (the major uranium bearing mineral in natural ore bodies), if the mineral uraninite dissolves congruently, and the effect of groundwater chemistry on the mechanism of uraninite dissolution.

Evaluation of the effect of acarine mite on honey bee colonies in Saskatchewan : final report

Saskatchewan. Beekeepers Association. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1990. 20 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ISSN 0829-9455

MICROLOG 92-06533 1 fiche

About 200,000 of the 700,000 honey bee colonies operated in Canada during 1986 were started with package bees imported from the United States. Since the discovery of the honey bee tracheal mite in the U.S. in the summer of 1984, packages continued to be imported into Canada but with certification. In 1986, an experiment was conducted comparing package colonies infested with tracheal mites and non-infested packages. The comparative trials were repeated in 1987 and are reported here. The experiment was conducted in isolation and under quarantine at La Ronge, Saskatchewan, 250 km north of Prince Albert and 200 km north of the agricultural area. Both the infested and non-infested packages were started with three pounds of bees and a mated queen. Samples were collected from the initial packages and periodically over the summer months and analyzed for infestation. In October 1987, each of the packages was also sampled for varroa mites.

An Evaluation of the effectiveness of Swareflex (TM) deer reflectors

by J.J. Armstrong. Downsview, Ont. : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1992. iii, 15 p. Bibliogr.

MICROLOG 92-04289 1 fiche

Every year in Ontario approximately 1,500 deer/vehicle collisions occur, resulting in over 2 million dollars in damage and approximately 200 personal injuries. An alternative to the standard method of 'leaping deer' signs on the road is the installation of reflectors claimed to modify deer behaviour in the presence of traffic. This study tested Swareflex, the reflector manufactured by D. Swarovski and Co. in Austria and distributed in North America by Strieter Corp. of Rock Island, Illinois. In an effort to reduce the high number of deer/vehicle accidents on a 12 km stretch of King's Highway 21 from Grand Bend south to the Ausable River, and to determine the feasibility of more extensive use of this control technique, Swareflex reflectors were installed along a 4.1 km section of the highway in August 1990. This report describes the results of the survey between October 1990 and October 1991.

Evaluates the Ministry of Education's Equivalent Standing for Mature Students Policy used by most Ontario boards of education. Use of the policy has grown since its introduction in 1974, and continues to grow. Nearly 3 times as many women as men, and more older than younger adults use the policy. 'Maturity' credits outnumber credits for 'other courses' or 'apprenticeship' by almost 5 to 1. Most of the recipients seem to complete the programs they undertake. There is a wide variation across the province with respect to grounds for assessment, methods of assessment, and awarding credits, as well as for informing potential applicants of the policy's existence. Despite this, there is little evidence of applicants 'shopping' among boards, though the use of discretion in the assessment of eligibility seems to occur occasionally. The most difficult group are the youngest applicants, who do not seem to have developed the self-discipline deemed necessary to benefit from the policy. 5 appendices conclude the document.

A study of coastal populations of coregonids in the southern Beaufort Sea has been ongoing since 1978, with recent projects examining populations at locations west of the Mackenzie

Delta, where particular attention was paid to Arctic cisco. Tagging studies provided evidence that Arctic cisco, inhabiting the Yukon and Alaska coastal regions, undertake eastward migrations to spawn in the Mackenzie River system. This study was conducted to establish that Arctic cisco can survive the radio-tagging procedure; to determine the success rate of tracking radio-tagged Arctic cisco with aircraft; to obtain preliminary information on migration routes, timing and rate of migration of Arctic cisco originating from a major coastal bay east of the Mackenzie Delta; to observe the general condition and survival of Arctic cisco in a holding pen after capture and radio-tagging procedures; and to provide specific recommendations on capture, tagging and handling procedures if radio-tagging proves feasible.

This project follows on another, concluded in 1984, which identified two concepts. These concepts were developed through construction of mock-ups and full-scale working models. This report determined the feasibility of the two concepts, identified their advantages and limitations, made any necessary design changes, and evaluated the systems' performance with the help of potential clients. Observations were made for the development of operational prototypes and a proposal is made for the development of a portable system to enable disabled clients to be boarded and de-boarded away from a bus terminal.

Nitrate enrichment of drainage waters from coal and metal mines is a concern because of potential impacts on receiving water quality. Residues of the nitrogen-based explosives commonly used at mines may leach to surface waters where they stimulate algal growth, sometimes affecting fish habitat. One promising treatment option is the use of natural or artificial wetlands. A three-year pilot study of wetland treatment for nitrate-enriched coal mine wastewater was conducted at the Quinsam Coal Ltd. mine near Campbell River, British Columbia. The study designed and tested a field scale wetland for nitrogen and phosphorus removed from wastewaters generated at an operating coal mine. Removal of metals was tested incidentally. This report documents year three results and describes the overall results and conclusions of the study. The report also reviews recent literature on artificial wetlands and macrophyte ecology related to wastewater treatment. It provides preliminary wetland design criteria based on the results of the pilot study and information from current literature.

The multimodality location problem with balancing requirements is related to one of the major logistics issues faced by distribution and transportation companies, that of the management of a fleet of vehicles over a medium to long-term planning horizon. This paper presents a branch-and-bound algorithm in which tight bounds are computed by a dual-

This paper considers a class of capacitated facility location problems in which customer demands are stochastic. The problem is formulated as a stochastic integer linear program, with first stage binary variables and second stage continuous variables. It is solved to optimality by an integer L-shaped method. Computational results are reported for problems involving up to 40 customers and 10 potential facility locations.

Au cours des dernières années, le phénomène du mauvais traitement des personnes âgées est apparu comme une question de politique sociale. En 1989, le gouvernement de l'Ontario a entrepris une étude afin de mieux comprendre comment les collectivités ontariennes répondaient aux besoins des personnes âgées maltraitées. Ce rapport présente les conclusions de cette recherche. Les objectifs de cette étude sont de constater les rôles et responsabilités des ministères provinciaux à l'heure actuelle en matière de mauvais traitement des personnes âgées; les attitudes et les points de vue des intervenants et des consommateurs sur le mauvais traitement des personnes âgées; les programmes et les initiatives de lutte contre le mauvais traitement des personnes âgées en Ontario; et, les programmes et les projets innovateurs des autres gouvernements.

An investigation of the hypothetical relationship between learning disabilities and juvenile delinquency. Preliminary material includes a review of related literature and an overview of programs for learning disabled youths in North America. 20 helping and law professionals were surveyed to determine their views of young offenders while 23 young offenders were surveyed to identify perceptions concerning school experiences as related to learning difficulties and disruptive behaviour. Findings pertaining to the hypothesis that learning disabled students are more susceptible to delinquency due to certain personality traits were inconclusive. Recommendations include: that school records of young offenders be made a mandatory part of reviews; that study be done of the Susceptibility Rationale; and that a second survey be designed and an interview component added in future surveys to strengthen design.

This paper presents the results of tests conducted in a ten-storey experimental fire tower in conjunction with a project on smoke control technology for a fire safe elevator to determine the adverse pressures caused by buoyancy and thermal expansion due to fire, and the amount of mechanical pressurization required to prevent smoke from entering the elevator shaft and elevator lobbies. A un moment où beaucoup d'exploitants disposaient d'une marge d'autofinancement réduite à cause de la différence entre leurs coûts et le prix des denrées et de la diminution de leur avoir propre, les paiements d'intérêt sur l'encours de la dette ont été déterminants dans l'augmentation du nombre de faillites, de saisies et de ventes forcées. To obtain information on driving exposure in the province of Ontario, a mail survey of 12,019 drivers, stratified by age, sex and region of the province, was carried out in the fall of 1988. The return rate was 36 percent. Results of the survey include data for the various age, sex and regional groups on age of obtaining license, method of learning to drive, employment status, employment as a driver, and global 12-month and 7-day estimates of driving distance. Data on accident rates per million km by sex and age were calculated using approximately 500,000 Ontario driver records and the data gathered in this study.

This report is an extension of the study of the effects of fuel type and operating conditions on the SO2 and NOx emissions. An examination is made for SO2 emissions, or the equivalent sulphur capture, of the effect of fuel minerals, especially the calcium content of the fuel; of superficial velocity; of limestone type and size; and of recycle. For NOx, the report gives results of the effect of fuel volatiles; the effect of secondary to primary air ratio in circulating fluidized bed combustion (FBC) tests; and an evaluation of previous models describing NOx emissions from fluidized bed combustors for model agreement with the NOx emission data.

This paper discusses the impact of child care with particular reference to concerns that enrolment in child care during the first year of life may be detrimental and to the finding that children in child care tend to have a higher incidence of infections than age-mates raised at home. It also discusses quality as a global construct and reviews the research findings which demonstrate that the extent to which quality is present does make a difference. It focuses on individual factor associated with quality, such as the amount and type of caregiver and child interaction. Finally, it addresses issues of assessing and measuring the extent to which quality exists in a given child care situation, and the development and maintenance of quality.

During recent years, high interest rates on farm credit have greatly affected the profitability and even the viability of farm enterprises. This document discusses the evolution of the farm cash-flow interest-payment problem, immediate impacts attributable to high interest rates, and how well farmers can cope with high interest rates. It also addresses long-term impacts of the interest rates and examines where the issue stands now. AG CA CI CO SC

The Baffin Island Oil Spill (BIOS) project was conducted on Cape Hall at the northern end of Baffin Island from 1980-83. The project included experimental oil spills on a low wave energy, predominantly pebble-cobble Arctic beach and associated backshore areas. Cleanup methods were tested, but some plots were left untouched and were monitored regularly. Oil remained on a number of plots and on the intertidal beach after the project ended and this was monitored periodically until 1989. The program provides a long-term database for oil spilled upon a shoreline. These papers compared the findings of this and other oil spill monitoring programs.

A potential approach to maintaining winter road safety with dwindling staff resources while supporting environmental sustainability is through cooperative or joint management of snow control activities with landowners. This study identifies issues that relate to the feasibility of cooperative snow control on Ontario highways, and prepares recommendations that would allow such a program to proceed on a trial basis. The study includes a review of the research and extension literature related to joint snow control ventures with landowners; contact with other Depts. of Transportation to discover possible precedents; focus group meetings with several groups of Ontario farmers to obtain landowner views; review of current costs of snow control activities; and formulation of a model landowner agreement specifying the roles and responsibilities of both the landowner and MTO in cooperative snow control activities.

Feasibility of developing a tridem axle tractor for log-hauling applications

As the distances between the timber resource and the processing mills have increased, log-hauling vehicle operators in the interior of B.C. have increased the payload capacity of their tractor/trailer combinations by adding more axles to the trailers to minimize transportation costs. This report describes a study on the feasibility of building a tractor truck with a tridem group of axles for log-hauling applications. The study evaluated the stability, traction, and operational productivity of the tridem axle group; investigated a means of improving the braking safety of such vehicles operating on public highways; examined the possibility of developing a log-hauling vehicle that would be less damaging to the pavement on public highways; investigated the possibility of improving the off-highway tractive ability of log-hauling vehicles; and demonstrated and evaluated new technology for the log-hauling industry. The first phase of the research, reported here and conducted in 1988-89, included a literature search, a hardware search, a traction and gradeability study, and a vehicle dynamics analysis.

A Feasibility study of a rollover warning device for heavy trucks

J. Preston-Thomas, J.H.F. Woodroffe ; to document a cooperative project with Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination Group, Transport Canada. Ottawa : National Research Council Canada, Institute for Mechanical Engineering, Vehicle Dynamics Laboratory, 1990. xvi, 45 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Technical report ; TR-VDL-005) MICROLOG 92-00986 1 fiche

Vehicle rollover in accidents involving heavy duty truck combinations contributes substantially to injuries, fatalities and damages. Vehicle design has a significant effect on an operator's ability to sense impending rollover. Where the vehicle is a tractor with two trailers (particularly if it is an A-train, where there is no roll coupling between the two trailers), the driver may have no physical sensation of the rollover of the rear trailer until it is well past any possible recovery. This report assesses the technical feasibility of a rollover warning device (RWD) by exploring the technical factors associated with wheel liftoff and vehicle rollover, and identifying a specific approach for predicting incipient rollover. The cost of a device based on this approach is estimated and compared with the return-on-investment amount identified in the accident survey. The probable design features of the device are explored and an outline of further R&D is given to establish the performance of RWDs.

Feasibility study to establish a community heating system in the town of Springhill, N.S., using warm mine water : final report

This study assessed the feasibility of providing a community heating system for the Town of Springhill using flooded coal mines as the principal heating and cooling source. While past reports used the mine water potential as a source and the needs of the town for demand, this study focused on reviewing various methods and evaluating in detail the best and most cost effective method of fully utilizing this resource. The study compared the use of conventional oil and electricity fuels as a baseline to a full range of alternatives including local geothermal wells, district mine water distribution, and medium temperature hot water. Rather than analyze the entire town, a group of buildings that could be used as a future demonstration project or extrapolated for the whole town was selected for the study. The report provides the methodology for selecting and evaluating the targeted buildings, a site analysis, a comparison of alternative systems, a financial and economic analysis, and a range of options for technology transfer.

Environment, Lands and Parks, Fisheries Branch, 1991. ii, 110 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Fisheries technical circular ; no. 93) ISSN 0229-1150 ISBN 0-7726-1417-2 MICROLOG 92-00766 2 fiche

The survival and growth of stream-dwelling salmonids is largely density dependent due to the effects of territoriality and aggression. Young salmonids use aggressive displays and attacks to obtain a feeding territory, or a share of a food supply through membership in a hierarchy. This competition is of concern to the science of fish culture. This study investigated aspects of juvenile steelhead growth in relation to social behaviour and food availability. The study deals with aggressive behaviour in pen-held populations and the factors affecting size, aggression, and feeding behaviour. BC FI LS PR SC

This report is a compilation and assessment of the feldspathic mineral prospects in B.C. Field investigations of 10 occurrences selected for their accessibility and the presence of feldspathic sand, nepheline syenite, apite or phonolite were carried out in 1987. Mineral processing tests and spectrographic work were conducted and results are included in the deposit descriptions. In October 1989 the deposit descriptions were updated, including the petrographic observations. Material is from federal and provincial government publications, assessment reports, private company reports, and personal communications. This study further examines the argument of Andrew Greeley contained in his book Angry Catholic Women with data from a western Canadian province. Data for the study were collected in 1988 so it can assess whether the endorsement of feminist attitudes has changed in the years subsequent to Greeley's two surveys in 1979 and 1982. It also examines the relation between feminist attitudes and church attendance. AL BS PR SA

The focus of this paper is the Vancouver United Way's 1977 Symposium and subsequent Task Force on Family Violence, which operated from 1977 to 1979. It outlines the work and discussion which led to the examination of institutional response. It reviews feminist work in identifying and defining the issues of wife battering. It also provides a description and analysis of the United Way Symposium and Task Force. Finally, it discusses the nature and implications of institutional response and outlines considerations for resisting the institutionalization of women's issues. BC CI MU SA

Field measurements of natural NOx emissions from soils in Ontario, Borden and Egbert, autumn, 1989 and spring, 1990

Atmospheric NO and NO<sub>2</sub> (collectively known as NO<sub>x</sub>) participate in a complicated series of sunlight-initiated chemical reactions with various volatile organic compounds (VOC) to give rise to the net formation of photochemical oxidants, such as ozone (O<sub>2</sub>) and peroxyacetylnitrate (PAN), which have been implicated in health effects and crop damage. Natural sources of VOC are also known to exist and natural background levels of NO<sub>x</sub> and VOC exist in the atmosphere. A proposed control program for NO<sub>x</sub> and VOC is currently under review, therefore a knowledge of the natural emissions of key reactants is necessary to correctly model the regional impact of anthropogenic NO<sub>x</sub> emissions. An experimental program was begun to gather information on natural NO<sub>x</sub> emissions in southern Ontario. This report documents the results of chamber measurements of natural nitric oxide (NO) and nitrogen dioxide (NO<sub>2</sub>) emissions from soils at Canadian Forces Base Borden, Borden, Ontario, and the Centre for Atmospheric Research Experiments (CARE), Egbert, Ontario, during late October 1989, and also at CARE during April and May 1990.

Mechanical ventilation systems must not only possess the appropriate physical capabilities for flow capacity and air distribution, they must also be used regularly if they are to perform their intended function efficiently. To date, most investigations of residential ventilation systems have focused on developing or evaluating these system capabilities and little consideration has been given to system usage. A multi-year study was carried out to monitor the utilization of 12 conventional air-to-air heat recovery ventilators (HRVs), two exhaust-only HRVs, and three central exhaust systems. The systems were installed in occupied R-2000 and conventional houses, all of which were built with airtight building envelopes. Monitoring periods ranged from 9-40 months and produced a total of 45 house-years of field data.

Field study to assess the feasibility of disposing of diesel invert-based cuttings residues using land application

by J. Ashworth. Calgary, Alta. : Canadian Petroleum Association, Environmental Research Advisory Council ; Ottawa : Environment Canada, Conservation and Protection, 1990. vii, 45 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-02805 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

'Invert' drilling fluids consist of a dominant organic liquid component in which inorganic additives are dispersed. When sections of oil or natural gas wells are drilled with diesel oil-based invert mud, a residue of diesel invert mud and rock cuttings (DIMR) is produced. In addition to the oil component, DIMR often contains heavy loadings of added salts such as calcium chloride. The safe disposal of DIMR has become a concern to both environmentalists and to producers of energy. This report presents the results of a test in which DIMR was rototilled into the surface soil of small plots in June 1986. Manure, fertilizer, charcoal, and spent carbon-granules were added before seeding with a mixture of grasses and the soil was monitored for concentrations of polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs).

The Shade Index estimates the percent occupancy of competitor crowns overtopping individual jack pine seedlings within a 1.4 m radius of the subject tree. Using 360 crop tree-centred plots situated on six four-year-old plantations, the accuracy of the index was tested against a more complex competition index (Total Canopy Cover) obtained from vertical hemispherical photographs.

Recent interest in horizontal wells has been rapidly accelerating because of improved drilling technology, and the increased efficiency and economy of oil recovery operations. Since the drilling costs of such wells are 1.4-4.0 times more than vertical wells, it is imperative to conduct a reservoir engineering study of the recovery economics of horizontal wells before drilling. This paper proposes an efficient technique for field-scale simulation of horizontal wells in which the well is treated as a second porosity in the reservoir. The dual-porosity representation of horizontal wells is developed for black-oil simulation, and extended for thermal applications as well. In addition, elliptical grid refinement for improved predictions of flow phenomena around the well is developed for black-oil simulation. Simulation runs with the technique developed are carried out to study the effect of wellbore length and production rate on the oil recovery in a thin reservoir under bottom-water drive, using the black oil model. The elliptical grid refinement is also presented. As an example of the thermal application, a dual horizontal well (inject/producer) steam assisted gravity drainage process is modelled.

Ce document vise à : montrer l'importance et l'intérêt d'une négociation de transfert de technologie susceptible d'engendrer une véritable coopération entre les entreprises; faciliter la rédaction des contrats internationaux qui en découlent; et rendre plus facile l'exécution de ces contrats. De plus, le document attire particulièrement l'attention sur des problèmes reliés à ce genre de négociation et de contrat qui, en dehors des connaissances juridiques et techniques, font intervenir des facteurs culturels et psychologiques. Ainsi, il examine particulièrement les considérations générales; la terminologie; les différentes formes de contrat; et le processus de négociation.

Investigation for a systematic study of oxygen equilibrium data for the analysis of the pressure leaching process for the recovery of zinc from sulfide concentrates. The solubilities of oxygen were measured at 95C, 125C, 155C, and 185C for three partial pressures of oxygen (4 atm, 7 atm, 10 atm) and for aqueous sulfuric acid solutions containing zinc and iron sulfate salts. A two-stage program for solubility determinations, consisting of a high pressure, high temperature absorption step and a low pressure (atmospheric) desorption step at 50C, was developed and data is reported on oxygen solubilities in the various solutions at 50C and atmospheric pressure. Oxygen solubilities were also measured in a concentrated zinc sulfate solution containing 0.3 g/L of surfactant Lignosol, and in an industrial sample obtained from the pressure leaching unit of Cominco at Trail, B.C.

Two atmospheric evaporators were installed on the Harshaw plating line at Acadian Barrel Finishing in January 1989. The Harshaw plating line is a barrel plating line that uses a chloride zinc plating solution to bulk finish steel articles with a thin film of zinc metal to enhance the appearance and durability of the coated parts. Due to the nature of the process, a substantial amount of the zinc plating material is then rinsed off the parts and is subsequently treated in the waste treatment facility prior to discharge to the municipal sewer. The evaporators were installed to reduce the amount of zinc plating solution that was lost through drag out and to recover as much as possible of this solution. This report presents the results of installation of the evaporators, which were commissioned in February 1989 and monitored for performance for the remainder of the year. The report also gives cost savings and payback period. EV ON PR SC

At approximately 5:00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 20, 1991, a fire occurred at a warehouse located south and west of Grand Coulee. The warehouse was being used as a transfer facility as part of the province's Agricultural Chemical Collection Program (ACCP) and contained a variety of waste agricultural chemicals and a smaller quantity of waste laboratory chemicals. An inquiry was held into the fire, how it started, what was in the warehouse, and how efficiently the emergency response had been. An environmental assessment of possible short- and long-term damage was conducted, as well as an evaluation of the ACCP to see if collection, transportation, and storage of the waste chemicals was being done in the best possible manner. This report reviews the Fire Commissioner's investigation, the additional environmental investigations, the cleanup program, the report of the independent investigation into the ACCP, and the recommendations included. by K. Schwenker. Halifax : Disabled Persons Commission, 1992. xi, 329 p. MICROLOG 92-05911 4 fiche

This report begins with a brief overview of sign language interpreting, then summarizes the research documenting the legislative and policy regime for government support for the provision of visual language interpreter services in Nova Scotia and across the country. It then provides further feedback from the deaf community on the quality of existing visual language interpreters in Nova Scotia, and the effect that having qualified interpreters has on their lives. Evidence of the need for visual language interpreters is given by employers and the deaf themselves, and barriers, including attitudinal and cultural, are described, along with their effect on employment and education. The report then concludes with an estimation of the number of trained interpreters required, employment opportunities and salaries, the implementation of a training program, and the legislative and policy enhancements needed from the provincial government. Finite-state morphological models are formalisms describing the set of valid word-forms of natural language and are well-suited for computer implementations. They have typically been used for creating systems that efficiently recognize and generate isolated word-forms. In this paper, the author gives a presentation of Koskenniemi's two-level morphological model and compares it with alternative approaches. Integrating such models to natural language processing systems that deal with sentences typically implies modifying the morphological component so that it works in a continuous-text environment. The author discusses how this transition from isolated-words to continuous-text may be done, and shows that, in addition to the orthographical phenomena normally described by morphological models, the resulting system displays interesting properties for describing 'inter-word' phenomena such as elisions and contractions.

The behaviour of single point-ignition and line-ignition experimental fires was studied in upland black spruce-lichen woodland stands at Porter Lake in the Caribou Range of the Northwest Territories from June 26-July 8, 1982. The experimental burning project objective was to relate the head fire rate of spread (ROS) in this fuel type to the initial spread index (ISI) component of the Canadian Forest Fire Weather Index System. The experimental fire plots varied in size from 0.02 ha-0.65 ha. and the live tree overstory averaged about 1200 stems/ha and 5.0 m in height. The lichen layer averaged about 3.5 cm in depth. Three point-ignition fires, seven line-ignition fires, and one wildfire were documented over a wide range of burning conditions. A relationship for equilibrium fire spread in black spruce-lichen woodland stands was established.

Fire-resistant materials : the benefits of standards and certification

MICROLOG 92-02035 1 fiche

The use of fire-resistant materials can be a key component of a fire prevention program in an underground mine. Over the past several years, the Canadian Standards Association has brought together experts from the users (mines), manufacturers, regulatory agencies, and others to develop stringent standards for conveyor belting, hydraulic fluids, and ventilation materials. Each of the standards has a number of categories, with the choice depending on the nature and requirements of the mine. The Canadian Explosive Atmospheres Laboratory, which provided a considerable part of the technical basis for these standards, is the only agency testing and certifying materials to them. This paper compares Canadian standards to those existing in other countries and explains the origin of some of the differences. The various tests that are incorporated are also shown.

Fireline construction : bulldozer production rates and guidelines for constructing fireguards in boreal forest cover types -- Rev.

To date, little information is available regarding actual bulldozer production levels for boreal forest types. This report combines the results of a bulldozer productivity study undertaken by the Northern Forestry Centre with the experience of forest personnel and contractors to determine common problems and develop solutions for a range of fireline conditions. Results of the NFC study were derived from a database that incorporated approximately 200 km or 600 hours of actual bulldozer fireguard construction during wildfires. The report covers the role of bulldozers in fire control and the organization of bulldozer units; fireguard construction productivity, requirements for individual boreal forest types; strategy; fundamental standards for constructing bulldozer fireguards; maximizing productivity; the environmental impact of bulldozer use and fireguard reclamation; and safety considerations.

This paper assesses evidence, from the G-7 countries, of a link between a country's fiscal policy and its external balance, often referred to as the 'twin deficits' phenomenon. It reviews the stylized facts and examines the theoretical case for such a link. It hypothesizes that important cross-country linkages may not have been incorporated in previous tests recorded in the literature. It also seeks to establish whether the data for the 1980s are substantially different from those for the 1970s, and whether studies focusing mainly on the former would give a fair impression of the strength of the link between the two balances.

Economic policy is increasingly being conducted by provincial governments. While monetary policy is exclusively in the federal domain, fiscal policy is a shared responsibility. Attention tends to be focused on federal taxes, spending, and deficits, but those of the provinces in aggregate are just as important. In addition, the federal government supplies a significant amount of the financial resources of the provincial governments, and in the latest budgets has attempted to control its own spending by limiting such transfers. This paper examines some of the prominent trends in provincial and federal fiscal policy since 1975 in order to provide a background against which total fiscal policy and future federal budgets can be evaluated.

The study was undertaken in search of answers to questions concerning the life history of Arctic cisco, an anadromous coregonid that is common along the Beaufort Sea coast during the summer months. The study determined whether major rearing/overwintering of juvenile Arctic cisco from the Mackenzie River occurs east of the Mackenzie Delta; identified specific areas to the east of the Mackenzie Delta that may be critical to the maintenance of Mackenzie River stocks; and quantified the significance of such eastern locations to Mackenzie River populations. In 1989, the first year of the study, monitoring and description of the coastal migrations of Arctic cisco in Wood Bay near the mouth of the Anderson River was conducted.

A hot mix recycling (RHM) program was begun in 1979 based on the findings of a Task Force set up to study its use as an alternative for rehabilitating highway pavements. By 1980, RHM represented about 20% of the paving program but early observations indicated that it needed improvement and evaluation. An experimental program was initiated, including a series of laboratory tests and field crack mapping data to evaluate the properties of RHM. This report presents the five-year field monitoring results and findings on the part of the study on low temperature performance of RHM placed during the first few years of the program.

Second five-year report on the status of forestry in the province of Manitoba. The report reviews the status of Manitoba's forest resource, examines forest management programs, and analyzes their effectiveness. It also outlines trends in forestry product demands and evaluates the forest resource capability in meeting those demands. Significant events described include partnership initiatives, cost-shared cooperation, forest protection, company forest management agreements, industry developments, and legislation and policy. Information is also given on annual allowable harvests, wood surpluses, wildfire losses, timber sales and permits, trends, and forecasts for demand.

The Flair Homes Energy Demo/Canadian Home Builders' Association Flair Mark XIV Project was created in 1985 to provide a demonstration of various energy conservation technologies, products, and systems which might be suitable for the Canadian building industry. Twenty-four houses were constructed in Winnipeg, Manitoba by a major tract builder and intensively monitored for periods of up to three years by an independent engineering firm. During most of this period, the houses were privately owned and subjected to normal usage by their occupants. The field work was completed in 1990. This report was prepared as a general background on the project, including background information on the houses, details of their building envelope and mechanical systems, an overview of the monitoring program, and the information in the project's data base, which contains all the monitoring information collected during the project.

Antimony trioxide in conjunction with a halogenated organic compound constitutes one of the most commonly used flame retardant systems for polymeric materials. Although there is only limited agreement about the antimony species present and their roles in fire retardance, each study indicates the presence of SbCl<sub>3</sub>, although none of the studies were carried out under oxidative (real fire) conditions. This project evaluated the action of the Sb<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub>-halogen system in a more realistic fire situation by monitoring the gaseous species produced from fire-retardant polystyrene in an oxidative atmosphere (air). A modified mechanism for fire retardant action of the Sb<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub>-halogen system is suggested that accounts for the species SbOCl<sub>2</sub>, SbOCl<sub>3</sub>, SbCl<sub>3</sub>, SbCl<sub>3</sub>(OH), SbCl<sub>3</sub>(OH)<sub>2</sub>, SbBr<sub>3</sub>(OH), SbBr<sub>3</sub>(OH)<sub>2</sub>, and SbCl<sub>4</sub>.

Early in 1989, an agreement was made to conduct an operational R and D program on the Microwave Landing System (MLS) installed at the Ottawa International Airport to develop curved, segmented approaches making use of the wide angle MLS signal coverage available, and to demonstrate the benefits of these approaches to Canadian air traffic services and air carrier personnel. The program was to be tested on a Twin Otter and the Falcon 20. This paper covers the second phase of testing carried out on the approaches incorporating track angle changes beyond 180 degrees, validated these algorithms in flight, and assessed pilot workload and tracking accuracies for selected approaches using a properly functioning flight director.

This report presents the results of using a non-invasive marker composed of a type of polyurethane tubing previously used as a streamer on a spaghetti tag to tag beluga whales. The information was collected from both short-term experiments in a holding pool near the Churchill River, Manitoba, and from longer term studies on whales at the New York Aquarium. Round bands were fitted onto the left wrist of three temporarily restrained wild beluga during live captures for aquaria at the Churchill River in July 1987, to determine whether the bands would fit onto and be tolerated by the whales. The bands were removed after a few minutes of observation and the whales released. Banks were also tested for four days at the Churchill River during beluga live captures in July 1988. Long-term effects were tested on four whales held at the New York Aquarium, begun in October 1987.

An improved understanding of the response characteristics of conventional treatment facilities to typical input fluctuations in trace contaminants would assist regulatory authorities in the development of appropriate sewer use management strategies. An investigation was undertaken in three phases, of which this report is Phase II. Phase I was a comprehensive technical review of available information. Phase II involved an intensive sampling program at three full-scale Ontario sewage treatment plants (Waterloo, Galt, and Welland) to quantify the degree of variability in the concentration of trace contaminants in the influent and effluent streams from such facilities and to generate dynamic models that would describe the non-steady state behaviour of the facilities. The raw influent wastewater and the secondary effluent, prior to disinfection, were sampled at each facility at 2-hour intervals for 8 days. Samples were analyzed for polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, phenolic compounds, volatile chlorinated and non-chlorinated organic compounds, chrome, zinc, copper, nickel, lead, cadmium, cobalt, mercury, molybdenum, arsenic, and selenium.

The Rainbow Basin Carbonate Reefs are extremely heterogeneous reservoirs containing light oil that has been exploited through primary depletion, waterflooding (secondary), and hydrocarbon miscible floods (tertiary). It was recently proposed to use gravity assisted immiscible gas injection (GAIGI) for EOR in the same area. The target reservoir is Rainbow Keg River F pool, a vuggy, highly fractured dolomite reef. To develop reasonable production forecasts and recovery under the GAIGI scheme, an study was undertaken to understand multiphase flow phenomena in heterogeneous systems similar to the Rainbow Keg River environment and to characterize the target reservoir in a way that would allow a successful design of the proposed EOR scheme in the field. This report covers the first phase of the study, involving a flow of three immiscible phases (water, oil, air) in two dimensional glass micromodels and in unconsolidated media under ambient conditions. It also involves the development and implementation of techniques for the measurement of wettability characteristics and capillary pressure curves of heterogeneous systems such as the Rainbow Reefs.

This project determined methods for the in-situ multi-phase saturation measurements using computer assisted tomography (CAT) scanning; determined saturation profiles during gravity assisted immiscible gas injection (GAIGI); and studied the possibility of coning control using bacteriogenic mineral plugging. In situ multiphase saturation determination as attempted in a series of tests where a core was saturated with brine, oilflooded to connate water, waterflooded to residual oil, and then flooded by air horizontally. Two phase and three phase determination algorithms were used for the calculation of individual saturations along with an assortment of fluid dopants. A series of tests was also performed to duplicate and demonstrate the capabilities of the proposed bacteriological mineral pluggings that is currently being patented.

The production of perennial forage crops has a vital role to play in diversifying the agricultural economy of the prairies and maintaining the productivity of the soil. This bulletin presents a summary of the work done on utilizing harvested forages primarily for growing-finishing beef cattle at the Melfort Research Station from 1954-89. A number of the trials reported estimate the relative economics of the treatments, under a given cost/price situation and assuming only the variable costs listed. No account is taken of the value of the forage crop in improving the productive capacity of the soil by preventing erosion, or of the return of nutrients to the soil in the form of animal wastes and bedding. The bulletin covers forage quality, moisture content at harvesting, types of forage crops, amount consumed by various types of livestock, how forage meets nutritional requirements, processing hay for growing beef steers, and feeding and finishing beef calves and heifers on forage-based rations.

Douglas-fir and arboreal lichen litterfall are important components of mule deer winter diet in the Cariboo Forest Region of central B.C. Trees that produce the most litterfall per hectare are highly valuable and require special consideration in management plans for winter ranges. This report presents the results of two studies designed to measure litterfall rates. The first study compared litterfall rates among three even-aged stands of different ages growing on similar sites and the second examined litterfall rates from 72 trees of varying ages and sizes within an uneven-sized forest, several times over one winter. This report presents the results of the two studies, followed by a general discussion which focuses on the management implications of the findings.

This paper explores issues related to the modelling and estimation of short term demand of empty containers for subsequent movements on international shipping lines. The study is part of a larger research effort directed towards the development of models, methods and integrated planning tools to address typical problems related to the management of the land distribution and transportation of containers. The study is based on actual operational data coming from a large international maritime shipping company. The paper describes this information and the extensive manipulations required to obtain a suitable data set for statistical analyses. These included analyses both on the daily demand and on the weekly demand for various combinations of container category and customer aggregation. The paper concludes with a discussion of the difficulties and requirements associated with forecasting short-term demand of containers.

The forested area of N.B. is 48 percent owned by the Crown, with management objectives defined by the provincial government. Licence holders (forest companies) are responsible for the planning and implementation of all management activities and they must submit a plan detailing proposed activities to the Dept. of Natural Resources and Energy every five years. Despite this, surveys have indicated that within 25-40 years the supply of mature and overmature coniferous-dominated forest will be significantly depleted. Beginning with the 1992 forest management plans, management objectives for Crown land must include white-tailed deer winter habitat and mature coniferous forest habitat. This report summarizes the requirements of the 1992 plans, including a definition of habitat relationships, forest opening size for wildlife, leave block size, adjacency delay, assessment of costs to wood supply, forest composition objectives, habitat supply analysis procedures, planning and assessment capability, and a public awareness program.

MICROLOG 92-05078 2 fiche

Forest management agreements (FMAs) came into being in Ontario through an amendment to the Crown Timber Act in 1979. The agreements cover a specific section of Crown land and replace existing licensing arrangements with an Agreement which requires the companies to manage the forests on a sustained-yield basis, including responsibility for harvesting, planning, regeneration and other silvicultural activities necessary for proper forest management, including construction of access roads. The agreements are for 20 years but every 5 years the Minister must evaluate how the company has carried out its obligations. These detailed evaluations cover procedures and findings, maintenance of productivity, company concerns, and conclusions and recommendations.

This report describes a survey taken to obtain input from major clients of the Forest Renewal Group at the Ontario Forest Research Institute to review and plan a research and development strategy. The survey was conducted to identify key research needs and ways to improve the group's technology transfer to its clients. Of the 133 forms distributed, 98 were completed and returned from 13 container and 9 bareroot nurseries, 13 Forest Management Agreement holders, and 63 Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources sources. Respondents were categorized by OMNR administrative region and group and regional and group influences were identified in each section.

The certification of the origin of Canadian forest tree seed began in 1970 under the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development scheme. Responsibility for implementing the scheme in Canada was delegated to Forestry Canada and regional forestry centres were given the responsibility of administering seed certification. Certification of the physical quality of Canadian forest tree seeds under the International Seed Testing Association (ISTA) rules has continued since 1974. This report summarizes activities before 1986; gives details on weight of seed certified by origin and tested for seed quality from 1986-90; describes Forestry Canada's participation in referee testing and liaisons with other organizations; and projects the future of seed certification in Canada. Forest vegetation management research strategy for the southern interior, British Columbia

1990. ix, 55 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (FRDA report ; 132) ISSN 0835-0752 ISBN 0-7726-1185-8 MICROLOG 92-06353 1 fiche

In the southern interior of B.C., the vegetation management research program was organized by broad climatic units and vegetation complexes. This approach is useful for organizing problem-specific and site-specific research. However, a framework is now required to organize the result of these projects into general field applications, and to coordinate future research. This report identifies key research needs in the southern interior and outlines a framework for synthesizing the research results into operationally useful tools. The report was prepared following a review of available documents, field tours in the southern Interior, and discussions with field and research staff. To identify key research needs, a questionnaire was distributed to forest, range, and wildlife managers and forestry researchers working in, or doing work relevant to, the southern Interior. Responses were received from 88 individuals in November and December 1987.

by T. Singh. Edmonton : Canada-Alberta Forest Resource Development Agreement, 1991. 15 p. ISBN 0-662-18498-X MICROLOG 92-04072 1 fiche

This study modelled the risk of fire at the stand and forest level to aid management decisions on the effect of such occurrences on annual allowable cut and future timber supplies; determined the frequency of large-scale insect and disease occurrences, and derived a model to assess their impact on the present and future forest yields; and tested, reviewed, and modified the fire, insect and disease, and other risk factor models for application over boreal forest ecoregions in western Canada. The program involved probabilistic (a preliminary version of the FOREstry Risk Model (FORIM) based on Hinton leasehold and East Slopes fire risk data), deterministic (FORMAN model selected, modified, and tested for impacts in the Footner Lake and the Peace River volume sampling regions in northern Alberta), and dynamic (Markov decision support model applied to optimal forest management strategies for the Peace River and Footner Lake forests in northwestern Alberta) modelling approaches to give a comparative assessment of their merits.

The detection of ongoing changes in forested areas monitored with satellite images is traditionally accomplished with multi-date band ratios, enhancements, and classifications. The Forestry Expert Package (FEP) uses single-date Landsat classifications as input data, compares them, and decides on the significance and cause of detected changes based on rules derived from forestry knowledge. This report presents the results of an experiment in which classifications of geometrically corrected images of different years and different seasons were obtained with an unsupervised classifier for a test area near Lake Traverse in Algonquin Park, Ontario. Several tests were run to determine if the FEP would detect logging activities and the subsequent regeneration known to have occurred in this area and to see if any improvement in the classification for forest types of the non-changing areas could be achieved over conventional single data classifications.

Près de la moitié de la superficie terrestre du Canada est couverte de forêts, lesquelles représentent globalement environ 10 p. 100 des terres forestières du monde. La forêt joue un rôle capital dans la mosaïque environnementale du pays et influe considérablement sur le climat, sur les bassins hydrographiques ainsi que sur l'habitat de la faune terrestre et aquatique. Elle fait également partie intégrante de la culture et du patrimoine des Canadiens. Ce document se penche sur les forêts et le réchauffement de la planète et examine particulièrement la forêt comme réservoir de carbone, la gestion des forêts, les incendies de forêt et le brûlage dirigé, et les répercussions du réchauffement de la planète sur les forêts.

Le rythme accéléré des changements technologiques en entreprise exige des gestionnaires qu'ils envisagent la formation comme un investissement essentiel et qu'ils investissent dans de bonnes politiques et de bons programmes de formation. Premièrement, elle doit être intégrée dans un cadre de planification globale. Ensuite, l'approche pédagogique retenue doit être multiple. Enfin, un suivi authentique de la formation doit permettre d'évaluer avec quel succès les notions apprises s'intègrent au travail.

Ce rapport étudie le rôle de la formation professionnelle dans le processus d'innovation technologique, en Ontario. La 1ère section examine le processus de diffusion technologique et passe en revue les 4 étapes du changement technologique (invention, innovation, diffusion et déclin), les différents types d'innovations de produit ("dures" et "douces") et les niveaux de diffusion (à l'intérieur d'une société, entre sociétés, entre pays). Les 3 modèles du processus de diffusion y sont décrits (entrée-sortie, motivationnel, de production linéaire) et les divers obstacles à la diffusion y sont discutés (insuffisances dans la formation professionnelle à l'échelle de la haute direction, manque de formation technique, manque de recyclage des travailleurs). La 2e section examine les répercussions sur le plan des formations professionnelles et des innovations technologiques. La 3e section récapitule les traits saillants des études récentes, portant sur les formations professionnelles et la diffusion technologique. La 4e section traite des programmes de formation professionnelle. La 5e section examine les répercussions de la diffusion technologique sur la formation professionnelle et se termine par une liste de conseils. 5 annexes complètent le document.

This paper presents the results of a systematic analysis of 22 organic-walled microplankton genera described by Chinese authors between 1978 and 1984, and identified initially as fossil dinoflagellates. The generic discussions presented are based on the English translations of the generic and specific descriptions, together with selected critical passages from the publications by Chinese authors. In addition to providing English analyses, new illustrations are included for each of the retained dinoflagellate genera. • CA CF LS SC

Project to fractionate by ultrafiltration lignins extracted from steam-treated aspenwood; to study conversion of the isolated lignins to methyl aryl ethers, fuels, and phenolic compounds; and to assess their application as adhesives for panel products. The alkaline extracts of steam-treated aspenwood water-insolubles were subjected to ultrafiltration and the lignin-fractions isolated from single batch, multiple-batch, and constant volume ultrafiltrations were characterized. Studies using electrochemical methods to convert the lignins to low molecular weight chemicals were made. Preliminary assessments were made of some of the lignin-fractions obtained to date by the formulation of lignin-phenol-formaldehyde (lignin-PF) resins and production of small particleboards. An economic analysis of lignin use in wood products adhesives and as fuel octane enhancers was undertaken.

Because of continued electricity growth in the south central Fraser Valley area, the transmission circuit connecting Bridge River Generating Station and Ingledow Substation via Rosedale is no longer able to provide a reliable supply to the distribution substations serving the area. Based on the latest forecast of electricity demand for the area, reinforcement to the Ingledow-Bridge River transmission system will be required by the mid-1990s. This involves the building of 500/230 kV transformation facilities at an existing 230 kV substation along the transmission circuit and connecting the substation to one of the adjacent 500 kV circuits in the valley. Clayburn Substation appears to be the most suitable location. This document describes the electrical transmission system, the importance of reliability of supply, and the methods by which electricity is supplied to the region. Descriptions of the substation load, related to the load forecast, and load supply limitations are followed by a choice of three alternatives which could be implemented to solve the problems. The preferred choice is given, along with an economic analysis. BC EN PR SC

Results of an investigation into the concrete in the Frederick House Lake dam (constructed from 1937-38) to determine whether or not alkali-aggregate reactions were occurring in the concrete and whether the reactions could be causing the apparent expansion of the deck slabs. The investigation consisted of a review of historical information on materials used and tests conducted on the concrete; laboratory testing on aggregates obtained from the stockpiles at the site using CAN/CSA-A23.2-14A test procedure; monitoring of the length change of specimens prepared from a concrete core drilled from the south gravity section and the length change of core specimens stored in a NaOH solution with companion specimens stored in lime water; and petrographic examination of specimens prepared from concrete cores drilled from various locations through the structure. Over the past few years, the Dept. of Transportation has begun preparing plans for upgrading the Trans-Canada Highway through N.B. and the connecting links to Saint John. Most of the planning to date has concentrated on upgrading the highway in the same general corridor. However, at least 60 percent of the highway will have to be by-passed in some way or other. One of the areas of the highway network under review for upgrading, in which a general corridor has not been identified to date, is the route between Fredericton and Moncton. This project developed traffic and travel characteristic data which will facilitate the determination of traffic volumes attracted to each of the two highway corridors identified, and their implications on the existing system. Five survey stations were established, two of which included weigh scales. A questionnaire to be filled out by an interviewer was used for the off-peak period of November 1990, and for the peak travel period of July 1991. This report presents the results of the surveys.

Investigated children's spontaneous ability to pursue their own learning goals under minimum constraints and minimum guidance. 62 students in 2 grade 5-6 classes were given an hour a day for 2 days to learn anything they wished, including responsibility for planning the learning and obtaining necessary materials. Experimenters tape-recorded students and interviewed them about what they were doing in order to obtain an accurate picture of their learning behaviour. Interview and observation data for a subsample of 22 subjects were compared. It was obvious that simply giving students the opportunity to pursue their own learning goals is not enough for them to direct their learning in a very intentional or problem-solving way.

The information used in the preparation of each production cost estimate was prepared through the use of recent Policy Analysis Branch studies, plus consultation with producers, extension, research and agribusiness personnel. For each crop cost estimate in this report, the data was organized into variable and measurable fixed costs and totalled to arrive at the cost of production on a per acre basis. Variable costs are those which vary directly with the production of each crop grown. They include seed, plants, hired labour, fertilizer, herbicides, insecticides, fungicides, other materials, machinery operating costs, marketing charges and interest on operating capital. Fixed costs inputs are interest and depreciation on machinery, and other overhead cost items. Labour hours and costs, land charges, materials, tractors, machines and trucks, custom farmwork services, interest on operating capital, other overhead, other cost considerations, yields and returns, and gross margin analysis are included.

The phenomenon of seeds remaining dormant within the soil is well known and documented but detailed information on the role of such seed banks in northern Ontario is very limited. Research is required to determine the species and abundance of seeds in the soil across a range of forest types, as well as to determine the function of the seed bank in post-disturbance vegetation dynamics. This report presents comparison tables of seed density and diversity for the boreal and deciduous forest types, and discusses the research that has been conducted. The review included detailed discussions of seed bank dynamics, physiology of seeds in a seed bank, boreal and deciduous forest seed banks, seed bank dynamics and succession, and recommendations for initiating a seed bank study in northern Ontario.

In 1987, Pace Chemicals Ltd. and Forestry Canada entered into an agreement to evaluate the herbicide technique Gel Cap, a vegetation management technique designed and developed for controlling unwanted tall growing trees by B.C. Hydro and Pace Chemicals. It is an injection system consisting of a capsule containing an herbicide and an applicator tool for affixing the capsule to the tree. The herbicide is dissolved in, and diffuses into, the tree's conductive fluids, causing it to die. It was designed for young, thin-barked trees such as red alder, aspen, and young coniferous species. Four trials were established throughout B.C. to demonstrate Gel Cap efficacy and productivity while comparing it to the hack-and-squirt method. This report presents the results of the trials.

This report provides information on the current status of girls and women in the B.C. education system. It begins with the B.C. Public School System, comparing the enrolment, subject selection, and graduation rates of boys and girls. It then examines the elementary and secondary schools, district and Ministry staffing to determine what gender imbalances exist in staffing in these areas. Finally, it provides a brief review of the gender distributions of male and female students and faculty in B.C. post-secondary institutions.

This guide provides general information on sawflies, including biological notes, collecting methods, economic importance, structures of adults, and classification. More detailed information is given by superfamily, with illustrated keys to adults included. In descriptive terms, English is used rather than Latin or Greek terms. A complete characterization is given under each taxon, along with a brief discussion of the known and potential diversity in Canada, the present geographical distribution and regions of greatest diversity, recorded notes on habitat and/or host, and pertinent references on keys to species and on biology.

A General descent framework for the monotone variational inequality problem -- Rev.

This paper presents a framework for descent algorithms that solve the monotone variational inequality problem. A descent method is developed for an equivalent general optimization formulation and a proof of its convergence is given. Based on this unified algorithmic framework, the paper shows that a variant of the descent method where each subproblem is only solved approximately is globally convergent under certain conditions.

Sitka spruce accounts for only about 2 percent of the total coastal reforestation in B.C., despite the fact that its stumpage price is the second highest and about twice as high as the average of other species. Destructive damage caused by the white pine weevil is the major deterrent to reforestation and planting is now limited to low weevil hazard areas. This report presents a brief overview of the Sitka spruce provenance testing program; a summary of results of weevil attack in provenance and clonal tests; a brief account of the progress in the selection and clonal screening of resistant trees; and a discussion on the practical implications of using, selecting, and breeding for genetic resistance in the short and long term.

This document discusses significant changes in the housing habits of households in the metropolitan Montreal region over the last fifteen years. In particular, it focuses on the phenomenon known as gentrification in which older inner city neighbourhoods are the scene of the emergence of a new, young, educated, and professional middle class with few or no children. These households gradually move into the neighbourhood, making substantial improvements to the previously neglected residential environment.

This report describes the chlorophenol information collected in the Fraser River estuary. Data from water, sediments and biological tissues, from over 300 separate sampling sites and covering 1973-87, were compiled into a single database and summary statistics are provided. The report also describes 15 different aquatic habitat types in the estuary which were assessed for their sensitivity to the presence of chlorophenols. These habitats were also digitized into a computer-based mapping system which can be used to evaluate chlorophenol data from specific habitat types. Chlorophenol data from the various habitat types are presented on maps and summarized in tables. Accompanying the report are printouts of the data and computer disks of the database and the digitized habitat map.

This work, which describes and interprets terrain conditions across the Hudson Bay Lowlands and adjacent Canadian Shield, was begun because of a need for mapping and characterizing earth materials and permafrost conditions for pipeline and hydro corridor planning. The report and accompanying map describe and interpret the terrain conditions across 48,000 sq km of the coast and hinterland of Hudson Bay. Surface mapping of materials was combined with a study of river exposures to reconstruct the preglacial and glacial evolution of the landscape, and postglacial changes in permafrost, climate, and sea level. The geological interpretation was used to locate anomalously high concentrations of minerals of economic value, including gold and uranium, assess aggregate sources, identify areas of sensitive permafrost terrain, and predict future environmental change.

This study was undertaken as a pilot project to determine the usefulness of the heavy mineral fraction of tills from the Todd Mountain area of Central N.B. in regional mineral exploration and possibly geological mapping. Samples, from a 1990 field study, were reduced to their heavy mineral fraction through a series of separations involving panning, shaker tables, and heavy liquids. They were then prepared as polished epoxy grain mounts. Initial mineral identifications were made optically and when ambiguities arose, identifications were confirmed by x-ray diffraction and/or microbeam techniques. All grain counts were eventually made optically once the mineralogy of interest was confirmed. The study also determined the approximate nature and length of dispersal trains based on the down-ice concentrations of the heavy mineral below known mineralized sources. Mineral relationships were investigated by calculation of mineral correlation coefficients between normalized counts of individual mineral types and mineral groups and the observed mineral abundances were related to the chemical analysis from Lamothe's (1990) study. Correlation coefficients were calculated between normalized heavy mineral modal abundances and the elements analyzed for Lamothe.

This paper introduces the CORE model, a prototype for a new quarterly model of the Canadian economy, designed for projections and policy analysis with focus beyond the very short run. The model has a clearly defined equilibrium and explicit adjustment mechanisms, primarily through relative prices, that are dynamically stable. Overlaid on a neo-classical growth model are shorter-term dynamics, roughly calibrated to reflect the Canadian data. It draws careful distinction between dynamics that arise from adjustment costs and other rigidities in the economy and dynamics that arise from the perceptions and expectations of economic agents. It illustrates the model's properties through simulations of the effects of two fiscal policy changes: an increase in the level of government spending, relative to total spending, with the debt-to-income ratio held fixed such that the extra spending must eventually be financed by taxation; and an increase in the debt-to-income ratio with the spending ratio held fixed such that there is a decline in taxation in the short term.

It also describes the diversity of learners and outlines the practices necessary to provide a program in which both excellence and equity can be achieved. In addition, it describes the program's components and outlines proposed graduation requirements. It looks at the changes to curriculum and assessment intended to support learners and learning in the Graduation Program. Finally, it describes the program's response to a need for partnerships that can provide opportunities for learners' intellectual, human, social, and career development.

Grain transportation facts

Regina : Saskatchewan Highways and Transportation, 1992. 23 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 92-03252 1 fiche

Saskatchewan is Canada's leading producer of grains and the grain handling and transportation system plays an important role in marketing the province's grain. The Federal Government is reviewing aspects of Canada's grain transportation system, including the method of payment of the Crow benefit, efficiency measures, pooling of seaway costs, minimum compensatory rates for canola products, and rural impacts. This report informs Saskatchewan residents of the issues, reviewing each of the five issues identified by the Federal Government; describing the current regulatory system and grain handling system and the costs; examining the potential impact of the proposed changes to the regulatory system and the physical plant on the grain producer and the Saskatchewan taxpayer; describing a number of options for paying the Crow Benefit; identifying a number of opportunities for reducing costs on the branchline and mainline rail systems, rail regulations, and ports; examining proposed changes to price pooling by the Canadian Wheat Board and proposed changes to minimum compensatory rates for canola products; and examining the potential impact of the proposals on rural communities. AG MS PR SC

Graphite mining in eastern Ontario began in the late 1800s and continued until the closure of Canada's largest graphite producer, the Black Donald Mine, in 1954. Recent increases in flake graphite prices have revived interest in eastern Ontario graphite occurrences. by P. Joseph and G. Luyt. Downsview, Ont. : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1992. iii, 16 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-06978 1 fiche

In northern Ontario, the maintenance cost of industrial roads is shared by both industry and the Ministry of Transportation, on the basis of gross weight-distance travelled. The existing system tends to allocate, disproportionately, the maintenance cost for damage caused by vehicles from both industry and the public. This inequity is partly due to the limitation in the existing system to account for the damage contribution from the bouncing and chattering of light vehicles. This paper proposes an alternative approach which considers all types of surface damage that increase maintenance costs.

This study was conducted to provide advice on administrative, financial and management issues affecting the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Seaway. The study deals with the commerce conducted, including grain, iron ore, coal, potash, and general cargo and steel; transport costs and competitiveness compared to the Mississippi River, the West Coast, direct rail to the lower St. Lawrence River, and trucking; concerns and opportunities, including technology and operations innovation, extension of the season, overseas general cargo and port marketing, and cross lake service; infrastructure costs, financing and administration; and the identification of issues where active and effective policy participation by Ontario could have a major impact on the growth and prosperity of the province's industry. These include the Ontario perspective on the Western Grain Transportation Act debate, the introduction of foreign built vessels and flag operations into the Great Lakes bulk service, and infrastructure administration and ports rationalization.

Study to determine the normal structure of the Great Lakes surface water temperature field and the normal variability in the field throughout the year. Grid point temperature data were used to compute the daily normal temperature and variability through the year at the grid point locations. Daily mean temperature and standard deviation were computed for each of the days of the year, for every grid point and for each lake as a whole. The lake-wide daily mean temperature and standard deviation tables and the annual temperature curves are based directly on the results of the data analyses. The beginning-of-month and middle-of-month temperature/variability maps were constructed by plotting the computed grid point temperature and standard deviation values for the corresponding day and then contouring the temperature and variability patterns.

Western white pine has a wide ecological range, from the coastal areas to the interior range in B.C. and western U.S. Although the species was devastated by white pine blister rust fungus, it has recently been reinstated for commercial use. This study addressed the specific question of white pine transferability between the coast and interior of B.C. through cold-hardiness testing of 34 seedlots, 29 of which represented the coast and interior of B.C., two of which represented the coastal U.S., and three of which represented the interior of the U.S. Detached needles were exposed to a series of freezing temperatures in a programmable freezer and relative hardness was calculated as the length of injured needle expressed as a percentage of total needle length 10 days after freezing. Seasonal progress in hardening was tested using five dates in autumn 1989. Seedlings were maintained at the University of B.C. nursery. Testing was also carried out from samples collected on separate dates from Nakusp in the B.C. interior and from Ladysmith, on the B.C. coast. The report discusses the implications of the findings and provides recommendations for western white pine seed transfer.

In B.C., over 95 percent of all reforestation seedlings are grown in styrofoam containers (styroblocks). Repeated use of styroblocks, however, promotes the development of algae and root rot fungi which results in significant seedling losses every year. To address this problem, over 100 methods for sanitizing recycled styroblocks were examined, and, based on these findings, recommendations for operational use were developed.

Winnipeg : Manitoba Labour, Field Inspection and Education Services Branch, 1991. 12 p.
MICROLOG 92-00536 1 fiche

During the summer months, workers in hot environment jobs can face dangerously high temperatures in their workplace. Excessive heat exposure may result in workers developing heat-related illnesses. This document provides guidance for the prevention of such illnesses and assists employers, workers, safety and health committees, and others concerned about heat-associated disorders. It also provides basic understanding of the effects of heat on the body, the monitoring of heat exposure, and methods of preventing heat-related illness from occurring.

Gypsum and anhydrite have been produced for export in Nova Scotia for over 200 years, with a total of 6.3 Mt produced by six companies from eight sites in 1987. Nova Scotia is the world's most productive gypsum mining area and yet little information is available regarding resources. This report presents information on such resources obtained through field studies and a literature review between 1985 and 1989. Data was accumulated on 186 surface and subsurface gypsum and anhydrite occurrence areas in Carboniferous rocks within the province. The data are presented by occurrence listed alphabetically within each county. Forty areas were considered worthy of additional investigation.

Although gypsum has been known in the province since the early 1900s, no comprehensive report on gypsum deposits has been published prior to the initiation of this study in the summer of 1988. Fieldwork supplemented by office investigation focused on the Stanford Range with its existing production centres and where extensive gypsum is present in the Devonian Burnais Formation. Some time was spent examining Devonian gypsum in the Joffe Creek and Mayook, Bull River, and Chipka Creek locations. In addition to the work in southeastern B.C., a single occurrence of Triassic age in the Forgetmenot Creek area east of Prince George was evaluated. Information from other deposits was compiled from various reports and government publications. Gypsum occurrences were assessed for their resource potential and quality. Wherever possible, stratigraphic relationships and structural controls were also examined. Samples were taken to assess the quality of the gypsum and its trace element content. This report provides an inventory and an estimate of the resource potential of gypsum in B.C.

Du large vers la terre ferme, on a reconnu l'eau libre, les herbiers submergés de zostère marine, les estrans vaseux-sableux, les estrans caillouteux, le littoral caillouteux avec frange de végétation, les estrans rocheux, les marais salés, les landes et les formations arbustives et forestières. La côte est de la baie James constitue une halte et un corridor migratoire de première importance pour plusieurs espèces d'anatidés. Ses différents habitats sont utilisés au printemps, en été et à l'automne pour l'alimentation, le repos, la mue, le couvert, la nidification ou l'élevage des couvées. D'emblée, les marais salés, les herbiers submergés et les landes semblent offrir le potentiel d'utilisation le plus élevé.

The paper describes the content of nodes (information structures encoded as attribute-value matrices) and the semantics of links (the relative pseudocomplement relation) in this inheritance hierarchy. Further, the paper specifies the nature of the path-based reasoning required by HPSG over the network, reasoning which is not confounded by the presence of a cycle. The implications of this work for theorists in both unification grammars and inheritance reasoners are discussed.

About 165 headgates need to be repaired, leading to significant cost, and therefore a number of repair options were considered. This report summarizes the results obtained in the welding option feasibility study, using the mechanized pulsed gas metal arc process and begun in March 1990. During the course of the project, it was found necessary to have a better surface finish than available by manual grinding. The portable compact robot developed for hydraulic turbine runner repair was briefly studied as an instrument for providing an acceptable surface finish.

Describes the health concerns of Ontarians based on existing literature and on interviews with sociology experts. The report focuses on personal and societal health concerns and presents a profile of the health status of Ontarians. Topics identified as the most worthwhile subjects for future TVOntario programs: the effects of the environment; alternatives to conventional health care; food quality and nutrition; childbearing and infertility; fitness and exercise; and stress. Societal health concerns identified as requiring further public awareness and education: AIDS and sexually transmitted diseases; drug abuse, including tobacco and alcohol; weight control; and the effect of free trade on health care. The health status profile reviewed life expectancy, socioeconomic conditions, and the cost and definition of health care. Topics proposed include: changing public attitudes towards the elderly and the health services available to them, and the effects of income and unemployment on health.

Each volume is directed toward a particular target group and each addresses specific aspects of the HSR process. This volume, for decision-makers, focuses on the need to promote the uses of HSR as a management tool. Strategies for promoting HSR among policymakers and senior managers are described. Based on an analysis of experience in developing countries in the last decade, this volume presents an overview of how HSR can lead to better decisions and how the development of an effective research program can be fostered at country level. In addition, it provides descriptions of specific strategies for promoting HSR among policymakers and senior managers that have been used successfully in a number of settings.

Hearn Thermal Generating Station acquired a vacuum degassifier unit (VDU) to remove volatile contaminants, such as water, from askarel oil that is used in the station transformers. Because of the high polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) content of the transformer oil (up to 70 percent), the Ministry of the Environment (MOE) requested that protective measures be put in place to ensure that PCB aerosol and vapour releases to the environment are kept as low as possible. To accommodate the request, an aerosol and vapour removal system was designed and installed on the VDU. A vent gas emission sampling program was also recommended. This report describes the aerosol and vapour removal system in detail.

Enhanced oil recovery processes that employ steam or gas injection tend to suffer from poor sweep efficiency caused by gravity override or the formation of preferential flow paths through high permeability or previously swept zones. These problems may be alleviated through the use of mobility control foams. A solubility study was performed to select low molecular weight representatives of steam-foamers, ensuring complete solubility at ambient to moderate temperatures. The surfactants chosen were an alpha olefin sulfonate, an internal olefin sulfonate, a linear zylene sulfonate, and a betaine. Adsorption of these surfactants on Berea sandstone was measured as a function of temperature or salinity through core flood experiments. Microcalorimetry was used to measure enthalpies of adsorption and the intensity of surfactant-solid interactions. Surface tensions were measured as a function of surfactant concentration for all systems, allowing determination of the critical micelle concentration and other parameters required as input to the surface excess model for flow through porous media. The core floods were simulated with this model, and the parameters of the model allowed calculation of adsorption isotherms for the various surfactant-brine systems.

This report describes a computer software package developed for predicting the error rate of a general HF communication system in a noisy and hostile environment. The original software was designed to facilitate the establishment of a new STANAG (Standard NATO Agreement) for radio communications in the HF band. The program estimates the bit error rate for a variety of system configurations, operational parameters, jammer characteristics, and ground wave propagation media, as selected by the user. Sky wave propagation is not considered. The package includes M-FSK and PSK (M=2,4,8) signals, CCIR background noise, and measured European interference environments. Estimation of error rate is based on analytical solutions rather than simulations. The cases for M-ary FSK with noise/tone jamming, and 8-ary PSK with tone jamming were analyzed and closed-form solutions were obtained.

During the commissioning of Darlington Unit 2, excessive vibration in the generator rotor led to the discovery of a fretting initiated crack in the body of the rotor. Since the rotor material is a modified version of the manufacturer's standard material, there were concerns about the material's resistance to fatigue damage and the lack of material data. A test program was undertaken to determine the high cycle fatigue behaviour at 100C of the material. Prediction methods, including the extensively used normal distribution and the arc sine function proposed by the shaft's manufacturer, were used to estimate the fatigue endurance limit.

High alumina rocks (over 20 percent weight Al<sub>2</sub>O<sub>3</sub>) of plutonic igneous origin are represented by major deposits in Ontario. Rock types in this category are predominantly anorthositic and nepheline-bearing syenites and gneisses and are the subject of worldwide process research and commercial demonstration. They are currently mined in Canada, Norway and the U.S.S.R. (nepheline syenites) and in Finland (anorthositic). This report presents a review of process technologies covering the methods in current industrial operations using anorthositic and nepheline-bearing materials and those that demonstrated technical viability in the extraction of products of commercial interest. The production of dimensional stone and crushed aggregates, which do not require metallurgical treatment, was specifically excluded from the review. A detailed review of high-alumina rock deposits in Ontario is also included.

To alleviate some of the problems associated with rutting on Highway 400 between Toronto and the Holland Marsh, selected resurfacing of the driving lane was done. Two cross-sectional slab samples representative of the rutting were removed, examined, and put through a series of laboratory tests to characterize the materials used, and to determine the cause of the rutting. This report examines the construction history of the sample locations and their present environment, including traffic conditions and summer temperatures. Sodium chloride has been used in Ontario and most of North America since the late 1940s to help remove ice from highways and to improve the effectiveness of winter abrasives. Recently, a number of undesirable side effects have been recognized and research has begun to mitigate these effects and to find alternative de-icing chemicals. This report presents state-of-the-art information on highway de-icing in Ontario and describes the search for economical, effective, and environmentally benign alternative chemical de-icers. As a first step in the introduction of a storm water quality management policy, a literature review was initiated based on North American, United Kingdom, German, and Scandinavian literature. The material reviewed is divided into the quality of stormwater as it leaves an operating highway, and the degree to which the quality of stormwater improves as it passes through a variety of paths. At the end of each group's review, a summary is presented. The conclusions of the first group are broken down into different situations under the headings of land use, lanes of highway, climate, type of drainage facilities, and type of pavement. ON PR SC TR

by G.B. Felton. Regina : Environment Canada, Conservation and Protection, Inland Waters Directorate, Western and Northern Region, 1990. 15 p. MICROLOG 92-01727 1 fiche

In April 1977, the government of Canada and Saskatchewan signed a General Agreement respecting flood damage reduction and an Agreement respecting flood hazard mapping and studies. The base mapping for Buffalo Narrows and Ile à la Crosse was completed before the expiry of the Agreement in April 1982 and the hydrotechnical studies were completed under the new Mapping and Studies Agreement, signed in March 1987. Without the base mapping, communities are not eligible for disaster funds. This report documents the method used to check the accuracy of the base maps for the community of Ile à la Crosse, as well as the rationale used to determine the historical flood levels for Lac Ile à la Crosse and Churchill Lake at Buffalo Narrows, and the relationship between the two lakes.

In the past 20 years, concern has been raised about the status of the Loggerhead Shrike in certain parts of the U.S. and Canada. In Canada, it is designated a threatened species, with a subspecies which occurs in southeastern Manitoba, southern Ontario and southern Quebec recently classified as endangered. In Quebec, the Loggerhead Shrike was declared an endangered species in the late 1980s and a provincial recovery plan was developed, along with a survey of breeding shrikes in the province. This report summarizes the data collected in recent years, containing information compiled to date on the history of the Loggerhead Shrike in Quebec, the results of surveys conducted in Quebec in 1989 and 1990, and data on changes to Quebec's agricultural landscape since establishment of the species in southern Quebec and the possible effects of these changes on the status of the species in the province.

Injection drug users are an important group at risk for the acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS). They also represent the primary bridge for infection in the heterosexual population and a woman who is pregnant can infect her unborn child. The purpose of this study was to increase our understanding of the high-risk behaviours among AADAC injection drug use clients. The study had three main objectives: to examine AADAC injection drug use clients' level of knowledge about AIDS; to examine AADAC injection drug use clients' needle sharing and sexual behaviour related to the transmission of AIDS, and to examine AADAC injection drug use clients' response to AIDS. Describes the Arts Propel philosophy of arts assessment developed by a group of arts educators and researchers. The 3 basic premises underlying this assessment approach are consonant with the Ministry of education curriculum guidelines in visual arts (1986). The Arts Propel philosophy states that: arts assessment should be concerned with the process by which students develop their artistic learning, as well as evaluating the final product; the emphasis should not be on production alone, but should include perception and reflection; and the assessment process should not be an end in itself. Assessment is carried out with 2 major instruments: the portfolio; and the domain project, an in-class learning exercise. An example of a domain project is given, along with instructions in the construction and evaluation of a student portfolio. In conclusion, comparisons are made between this method of evaluation and other holistic approaches.

Canada goose (Branta canadensis) populations in the urban areas of the Okanagan Valley of B.C. expanded rapidly during the 1970s causing numerous complaints from the public. A major, largely volunteer, attempt to halt the expansion by removing eggs and translocating young was undertaken. Enhancement of populations elsewhere was complementary to the objective. Over 1000 goslings, most from eggs artificially incubated, were translocated. This report describes the problems, constraints, methods, and results of the translocation effort.

Adequate, secure shelter is considered basic to human and social health and development. It was estimated in 1986, the year preceding the United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless, that over one billion of the world's inhabitants did not have access to adequate housing; of those, a hundred million had substandard shelter or no shelter at all. In Canada, estimates of people who had substandard or no shelter in 1986 were between 130,000 and 250,000. This document discusses defining homelessness, counting the homeless, the composition of the homeless, and shortage of affordable housing.

Parliamentary procedure is the set of rules governing the activities of an assembly. These rules can be in the form of sections of the Constitution or Acts of Parliament. Far from being a series of unchanging rules, procedure (particularly as set out in the Standing Orders) is constantly evolving, as reforms attempt to adapt the capacities of Parliament to a changing environment. This paper identifies recent trends and developments in Parliamentary procedure, and assesses their impact on the evolving role of Parliament.

Dans le cadre d'un suivi écologique amorcé au milieu des années 1980, on a surveillé des zones côtières de la mer de Beaufort pour déterminer les effets éventuels des activités de production pétrolière et gazière à venir sur les oiseaux qui se reproduisent dans ces régions. L'objectif principal de cette première phase de l'étude était de déterminer les fluctuations annuelles naturelles de l'abondance et des taux de nidification et de reproduction de l'espèce utilisée dans l'étude comme indicateur écologique, le huart à gorge rousse Gavia stellata. Cette publication se penche précisément sur le huart à gorge rousse comme indicateur de la qualité de l'environnement.

This report identifies four human resource development categories that have a direct impact on the ability of Canadian industries to be competitive and that will be important for public debate in the future: management and entrepreneurship training, labour force training, post-secondary education and the responsiveness of the educational system to the needs of industry. It then analyzes these categories in terms of specific issues and priorities important to ISTC clients.

by C.J. Turkstra and N.C. Lind. Toronto : Ministry of Transportation, Research and Development Branch, 1991. iv, 45 p. : ill. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-01230 1 fiche

This report describes a study of aspects of the Ontario Ministry of Transportation bridge design and construction process which affect the safety, reliability, and durability of the finished structure. The study reviews the communications, information networks, and authority structures of the bridge design and construction process through interviews with personnel in the Southwest and Central Region offices and in Head Office. Information was gained on stages in bridge planning, design, and construction; relevant communication links, paperwork flows, responsibility structures, approval processes, filing arrangements, quality assurance measures, and problem resolution paths; selected directives, forms, and manuals; and actual bridge cases, the nature of problems, and the relationship between actual and theoretical practices.

A human factors assessment was conducted for tasks associated with the 20-ton hydraulic load frame for in situ soil testing at Cranberry Junction on June 12, 1991 to determine if any of the lifts that are made while using the rig pose a significant risk of musculoskeletal injury to the operators. The assessment included videotaping as well as taking still pictures for use with WATBACK, a two-dimensional static strength program that calculates the movements around each joint and the compression at the L4-L5 disc of the spine. Four lifts were analyzed using WATBACK. The videotape analysis was performed to determine other tasks associated with the technician's job that may pose a risk of injury as well as to evaluate the design of the rig from an ergonomic standpoint.

Partial summary of the findings of research on baffle-equipped fishways conducted on a model system at the fish-farming facility in Pont Crouzet in the department of the Tarn in France. The experimental operation consisted of two basins in which fish could be kept connected by a glass-lined flume 0.3 m wide and 4.6 m long with a variable slope ranging between 0 and 20 percent. The study set up components of velocity in a direction other than the main flow of the water to identify four or five types of baffles that could be adapted to the relevant features of such changes in actual field conditions, such as differences in upstream water level conditions during migration, acceptable slope and discharge conditions within the fishway, and acceptable velocities in the fishway for the migratory species under consideration. Adults and juveniles of brown and rainbow trout were observed with each type of baffle.

Hydraulic compression of a shaft backfill : analytical model development

MICROLOG 92-00903 1 fiche

At the close-out stage of the proposed Canadian underground repository for used nuclear fuel, the dewatering system for the repository vault will be decommissioned and the groundwater regime around the vault will redistribute and return to the equilibrium position. At great depths, the magnitude of the groundwater pressure on the shaft backfill at the backfill-rock interface may cause compression of the shaft backfill and an annular gap may develop which could become a pathway for the migration of radionuclides from the vault to the biosphere. The backfill should therefore be designed to allow healing to this gap. A one-dimensional computer code, based on the integrated finite difference technique, was developed to describe the deformation (compression and expansion) behaviour of a clay-based backfill under a large hydraulic load. The analytical model was validated with one set of compression test results on a partially saturated, compacted backfill specimen consisting of 25 percent slightly swelling Lake Agassiz clay from the Winnipeg area and 75 percent granular material. This report describes the deformation of soil, the deformation of soils under a hydraulic load, and the development of the model.

MICROLOG 92-01068 1 fiche

This survey contributes to the Hecate Strait project in which the overall objective is to map fish assemblages and develop an ecological basis for mixed-species assessment and management techniques. The survey examined the feasibility of obtaining hydroacoustic estimates of Pacific herring in two major overwintering areas in Hecate Strait, Juan Perez Sound in the southern Queen Charlotte Islands, and the vicinity of the Browning Entrance on the mainland side of Hecate Strait. Midwater trawl tows were conducted to obtain herring samples and to confirm species composition of major aggregations determined by echogram interpretation. The survey of grid patterns was based on the experience gained from previous winter acoustic and fishing surveys in 1984. The hydroacoustic biomass estimates determined during the survey are derived statistically rather than empirically and are compared with other statistical stock estimates based on spawn surveys and analyses of catch and age structure. The hydroacoustic estimate is independent from these other methods, and represents the best available hydroacoustic estimate in view of the dynamic behaviour of herring and the time and resources available.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation's (CBDC) Victoria Junction coal preparation plant is located in Sydney, N.S., where it produces metallurgical and thermal grade coal from the highly volatile A bituminous coal mined within the Sydney Coalfield. Before transport to ships for overseas markets, the coal is stored above grade and open to the weather for 30 days to allow for methane degasification. Such exposure, however, increases the moisture content of the coal, which freezes during the winter, and also provides contractual penalties. An investigation was therefore conducted into the hydrology of large, above-grade coal stockpiles to establish methods of minimizing moisture contents. The field program consisted of monitoring four separate piles from June 1989 to December 1990, during which the summers were hotter and drier than normal, but the fall rains were heavier. The program emphasized the physical components of the hydrologic cycle within the piles, not the water chemistry Proposes hypertext analysis for online communicative acts and cognitive interactions in an online course. Hypertext systems are a new type of software for information storage, retrieval, and processing. Here the complimentary hypertext systems STORYSPACE and IZE are used to analyse transcripts from an educational computer conference. The categories of learning investigated under cognitive and affective strategies included: knowledge, knowledge integration, elaboration, self-monitoring processes, and socio-emotional skills. Further identification and refinement of classes of cognitive skills and strategies for transcript analysis are needed, as are new methodologies to track cognitive development and to determine whether external manifestations of cognitive interactions are different in face-to-face and online education. Computer conferencing's inability to facilitate learning depending on face-to-face interaction and those developing specific psycho-motor skills, is a severe limitation for educational use. Recommendations include further investigation into how the nature of the task affects the knowledge building process in online courses, how the learning situation affects strategies and outcome, how different instructional designs of online courses facilitate knowledge building processes, and is the knowledge building process in online courses effective where readings are assigned, or conferences with an open structure.

Great Mosquito Cove, Trinity Bay, Newfoundland is currently being considered as the construction site for the gravity based structure to be used at the Hibernia oil field. This study was conducted to monitor the spatial and temporal variations of ice during the 1990 season, to quantify the relevant physical properties of the ice cover, and to provide an estimate of the likely range of ice conditions at the site over the proposed life of the development. Ice conditions were observed from 15 January to 14 May 1990 and twice weekly observations were made of ice distributions and types in the cove and the adjacent reaches of Bull Arm. Ice thickness and snow depth were measured whenever ice conditions permitted safe access to the ice surface. The salinity profile and crystal structure of the ice was determined from an ice block extracted 22 March 1990. An automatic weather station was set up in the west end of the cove and recorded air temperature once every 15 minutes throughout the entire observation period. This data was used to assess some of the climatological differences between Great Mosquito Cove and nearby Sunnyside, where a nearly continuous temperature record exists for the past 17 years. This historical data was then used as input to a thermodynamic ice growth model. The model was used to predict minimum, maximum, and mean ice conditions in the cove, based on the historical temperature record. A survey of several residents of Sunnyside provided additional information about the historical ice conditions in the area.

This report presents summaries of ice thickness for 135 sites in both tabular and graphical formats. Measurements are made once per week beginning after freeze-up when the ice is safe to walk on and continuing until break-up or until it is unsafe to walk on the ice. In addition to ice thickness, the average depth of snow on the ice is also measured. The report also includes an index of stations, the location of sites, reference maps, and a description of the methodology.

Summer frosts can be a major cause of impaired growth and high mortality in conifer seedling plantations throughout the Cariboo Forest Region in central B.C. This guide presents a framework for management of frost-prone sites, reviewing factors that affect the occurrence of summer frost and providing a simple method for rating the risk of summer frost for tree seedlings on recently planted sites in the region. It also briefly summarizes silvicultural options for reducing frost damage to tree seedlings and describes some symptoms of frost damage.

Secondary Ion Mass Spectrometry (SIMS) was developed as a sensitive analytical technique for studying the low temperature oxidation of coal. This phase of the work measures the activation energy of oxygen consumption by different macerals in four Canadian coals; the distribution of reaction products in at least two different coals following treatment of the coal surface with CD3I, Tollen's reagent, Rb(OH), and Ti(acac) after reaction with 18O2; extension of the reagents used to other chemical oxidants such as H2O2, and an examination of the role of free radical scavengers in preventing oxidation using 18O2 as an isotopic tracer to monitor the oxidation process.

Fluorescent lamp ballast capacitors are among the products that may contain polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs). Questions about lamp ballasts concern the potential for leakage, the risk of heating and exploding, how to identify a ballast which contains PCBs, and the risk to human health. This study identifies those ballasts containing PCB-filled capacitors; the domestic and foreign manufacturers of PCB-containing ballasts; the total quantity of PCBs used in ballasts; and any potential problems. The study does not identify the risks of human health arising from the use of PCB-ballasts in fluorescent lamps.

To address poor operating practices at existing dumpsites in the province, the New Brunswick Dept. of the Environment developed and implemented a comprehensive solid waste management program with guidelines for landfill sites and dumpsites. However, as landfilling technology evolved and more information was available, it was determined that the guidelines needed updating. This report presents the result of the first phase of the revision of the guidelines, consisting of a literature review; a review and discussion of guidelines and regulations pertaining to the closure of containment landfills in other jurisdictions; a review of closure methods, procedures and regulations at non-containment landfills (dumps); and identification of options to develop a registry of closed dumpsites.

Identification of sources of chlorinated dioxins and furans in Frog Creek using introduced mussels Eliptio complanata

by A. Hayton, D. Hollinger and J. Martherus. Toronto : Environment Ontario, 1991. iv, 16 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-01640 1 fiche

Studies by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency found polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs) and furans (PCDFs) in fish from the Rainy River and downstream in the Lake of the Woods. PCDDs were also found in the sludge and the suspended sediment of the effluent of the two Kraft pulp and paper mills on the river at Fort Frances on the Canadian side and International Falls on the American side. In a subsequent study of the Rainy River in 1990, it was demonstrated that the mussel Eliptio complanata from an uncontaminated site could be used to detect PCDDs at a contaminated site after a short exposure period. The study also indicated that, in addition to the pulp and paper mill discharges on the Rainy River, there was a source of PCDDs to Frog Creek, a small tributary of Rainy Lake. Since the congener distribution pattern found in mussels from Frog Creek was similar to that found below the pulp and paper mills, it was suspected that the PCDDs originated from a pulp and paper mill operation. In 1989, a study was undertaken of Frog Creek to locate the source(s) of PCDDs in the watershed. The study hypothesized that one or more of the three wood waste disposal sites in the Frog Creek watershed was the source. As before, E. complanata was used as the biomonitoring organism. This report describes the methodology of the study and the results, and discusses the identification of the sources of PCDDs and PCDFs, and the use of mussels for monitoring.

Two samples composed of coarse-grained particles of a base metal ore and one of a flotation feed which had been ground to 80 percent minus 325 mesh were analyzed by image analysis for Esso Resources Canada Ltd. The data for the ore samples provided a basis for predicting the minimum and optimum grinds that would be required to liberate the sphalerite, chalcocopyrite and bornite. The flotation feed sample was ground to the optimum grind for liberating sphalerite. The proportions of sphalerite and copper minerals that occur as free grains in it were determined, and the particles containing unliberated mineral grains were classified. The mineral liberation data and the particle classifications were used to predict optimum recoveries from the flotation feed.

An image analysis study was conducted on four samples of a difficult-to-process ore from Niobec Mines Inc. to determine the liberation properties of the pyrochlore. The samples supplied were screened into 65-100 mesh, 100-200 mesh, 200-400 mesh, and 400 mesh fractions, and the fractions were separated with a heavy liquid having a specific gravity of 3.3. The samples were studied with the SEM-IPS image analysis system by identifying the minerals with the energy dispersive X-ray analyzer, and by determining mineral quantities, degrees of liberation, and size distributions with the image analyzer. Information was obtained on the nature of pyrochlores; the proportions of pyrochlore and columbite and their modes of occurrence; the proportion of pyrochlore, columbite and hematite in mixed grains; the proportions of silicates, pyrochlore and columbite in mixed grains; the proportions of carbonates, apatite, pyrochlore and columbite in mixed grains; the mode of occurrence of tantalum; and the presence of magnetite.

Immunopathogenesis of Bovine Herpesvirus-1 (BHV-1) infection in calves : final report

by C.E. Doige. Regina : Saskatchewan Agriculture Development Fund, 1990. 18 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 92-06543 1 fiche

Bovine herpesvirus-1 (BHV-1) causes several economically important diseases of cattle, including infectious bovine rhinotracheitis and death of neonatal calves. This research compared the pathogenesis of BHV-1 infection in neonatal and weanling calves by characterizing the type of cellular response in the blood and lymphoid tissue, and measuring the ability of different white blood cells to secrete substances that might control the outcome of the virus infection. The first study provided background information on the normal structure of the pharyngeal tonsil in cattle of various ages. The second study consisted of two different experimental infection trials. In the first trial, neonatal or weanling calves were given BHV-1 by nasal spray, and a variety of tissues and blood samples were collected at 24 hour intervals for up to six days in the neonates and eight days in the weanlings. In the second trial, up to six infected and six control calves of each age group were sampled 4.5 days after infection. This report presents the results of the experiments.

In 1983, the Ministry of State for Science and Technology announced a national biotechnology strategy to strengthen the federal capacity in this field. A research network on mineral leaching and metal recovery was formed called BIOMINET, consisting of 49 percent from industry and 17 percent each from government, universities, and provincial research organizations. By December 1988, the BIOMINET network had 496 members, more than 55 percent of which were from the mineral or energy industrial sector. This report describes the activities of the BIOMINET network from 1983-89, including its commercial successes in bioleaching, a bioreduction process for the recovery of elemental selenium from mine-mill effluents, and the establishment of biotechnology research groups in private companies. Information is also given on those firms involved in biotechnology research, universities involved in research with industry, research consortia, and CANMET cost recovery projects. It presents a mix of qualitative and quantitative information on the perceptions and experiences of representatives of 137 bands and 11 tribal councils. Ninety-two bands and all the tribal councils were interviewed using a telephone survey. In-depth information on impacts in the remaining 45 bands was obtained from on-site case studies involving interviews with band council representatives, elders, and community residents, as well as a review of documents and other information. Areas explored included the political, the administrative, and the lives of individuals. Topics probed included Indian status, band membership and membership rules, residency by-laws and intoxicant by-laws, as well as all program areas typically available at reserves.

Investigation of the hydrology of the agricultural drainage program, and its impacts on the land phase of the hydrologic cycle. Work included the development of an annotated bibliography following an extensive literature review; the performance of statistical tests on flow data to identify trends in the data which could be attributed to the drainage process; and the impacts of both field level tile drainage and small basin ditch drainage through the use of a physically-based hydrologic model capable of simulating the drainage process continuously through the frost free period. Required input includes field and tile geometry (field length and slope, number and spacing of drain tiles, depth of tile), soil characteristics (depression storage capacity, depth of ploughed layer and depth to impervious layer), groundwater parameters (saturated hydraulic conductivity and drainable porosity), and meteorological data (hourly rainfall and mean daily temperature). Output includes soil moisture storage, groundwater table height, subsurface hydrograph, and contribution to surface runoff. The model was tested on two fields in southwestern Ontario.

Impaired school formation at low density : a mechanism for depensatory mortality in sockeye salmon

by E.A. Parkinson. Victoria : Ministry of Environment, Fisheries Branch, 1990. 17 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Fisheries management report ; no. 99) ISSN 0705-5390 ISBN 0-7726-1510-1 MICROLOG 92-03475 1 fiche

During the lacustrine phase of their life history, sockeye salmon are planktivores that commonly school in the deeper, darker areas of the pelagic zone during the day, vertically migrate upward to feed at dusk, and then descend at dawn. Given a constant density of predators, the problem of school formation should be more severe at lower densities, since sockeye have more difficulty finding each other while encountering approximately the same number of predators. This paper uses a simple encounter model to illustrate the schooling problem and to provide some quantitative predictions to test the model. The schooling problem is also discussed in the context of the more general problem of compensatory predation and the role of predators in driving sockeye cycles and kokanee population fluctuations. The paper assumes that schooling confers an anti-predator benefit which reduces predation risk and that sockeye are unable to maintain schools at night rather than not choosing to do so. The report assessed the Canadian upstream industry's offshore and onshore current state of preparedness for dealing with oil spills resulting from exploration and production activities. This report outlines a plan for implementing the TFOSP report's recommendations and incorporating them into member companies' activities. The report deals separately with the onshore and offshore components of the industry, following the

The possible establishment of an harbour near Sandspit on the Queen Charlotte Islands led to a study to determine the spring use by Brant of Shingle Bay, eastern Skidegate Inlet, and the east coast of Moresby Island (Spit Point to Grey Bay). The study also investigated the feeding activities and the response of Brant to disturbance, and documented the distribution and abundance of all waterbird species in these areas. An inventory of Brant and other waterbirds was conducted by boat at the eastern portion of Skidegate Inlet, including the proposed harbour site in Shingle Bay from April 1 to May 15, 1991. In addition to the boat census, either Shingle Bay or the east side of Spit Point were surveyed by one observer or both areas were surveyed simultaneously by two observers for Brant during the study period. Brant at those locations were counted each hour during an eight-hour period per day to determine if their numbers and presence or absence related to time of day (minutes after sunrise) and/or tide height and direction. Flocks of Brant were observed on five days at the Spit and two days at Shingle Bay and their activities in feeding, preening, vigilance, and swimming were recorded and correlated with tide level and direction. Sources of disturbance and their effects were also recorded.

Improving access to legal information : a dynamic thesaurus for the Canadian patent reporter : a report

MICROLOG 92-03365 2 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Computer aided information retrieval is based primarily on the matching of words, rather than concepts, a restriction which leads to low recall of relevant items. The problem is serious in legal information systems, where arguments tend to be based on ideas, not just words. Concepts, typically, are described by a variety of terminology. A way of enhancing word-based retrieval is to provide the searcher with additional terminology for a particular concept by means of a thesaurus. This document discusses the use of a thesaurus for legal information.

Improving the efficiency, effectiveness and fairness of the process for environmental waste approvals

Toronto : Ministry of Environment ; Ontario Waste Management Association ; S.I. : Pollution Probe, 1992. i, 28 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 92-04886 1 fiche

This discussion paper was prepared by a working group representing the government, the waste industry, and the environmental public interest organizations, those most directly involved in waste approval applications. The paper deals primarily with the waste approval process and particularly with that part of the process from the time a first public meeting is held to discuss a proposed waste approval application to the beginning of an EPA, EAA or joint board hearing. The paper covers the roles of the Ministry of the Environment, the proponent, and the public and suggests some changes in procedures.

Inquiries into past serious accidents, both nuclear and non-nuclear, reveal that the causes, largely attributed to human error, are also failures on the part of the institutions responsible. Conventional wisdom holds that quality assurance is an essential element for any production process, but the inquiries have not suggested applying quality assurance to the institutions themselves. In this document, the Council argues the need for Institutional Quality Assurance, with some illustrations of what might be involved, and proposes what should be done to achieve this end.

The In-place Pollutants Program was initiated in 1983 to evaluate the significance of persistent toxic substances in sediments and develop management strategies for ecosystem protection from sediment contamination. Field studies were carried out from 1983-87 which generated a large quantity of data on contaminant concentrations in bulk sediments, various sediment fractions including interstitial water, bottom water, benthic biota, and bottom-feeding fish. In addition, a large quantity of benthic enumeration data was generated. This report addresses a number of ancillary questions related to the central issue of relationships between sediment contaminants and contaminant residues in biota. Recommendations are also given on data manipulations and design of future monitoring activities to permit development of stronger residue relationships.

The incremental costs of over 100 energy conservation components and systems were calculated using data obtained from the construction of the 24 houses in the Flair Homes Energy Demo/Canadian Home Builders' Association Flair Mark XIV Project in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Costs were calculated using a conventional 97 sq m bungalow with a full basement as a reference structure. The incremental costs were defined as those incurred by the builder beyond those normally encountered using conventional construction practices. Material costs and labour rates were obtained from local suppliers and sub-trades. No provisions were made for overhead, profit or learning time because of the significant variations that can occur. Components and systems included four types of wall systems; 13 types of basement insulation systems, including interior, exterior, and sub-slab insulation techniques; 13 window systems ranging from standard double and triple-glazed units to windows which incorporated multiple features to improve their thermal performance; 25 airtightness components for specific building envelope elements; and 11 ventilation system components ranging from simple fresh air

A parallel program may be indeterminate so that it can adapt its behaviour to the number of processors available, or at least so that low level timing issues are removed from the program. Indeterminate programs are hard to write, understand, modify or verify. They are impossible to debug, since they may not behave the same from one run to the next. This paper proposes a new construct, a polymorphic abstract data type called an improving value, with operations that have indeterminate behaviour but simple determinate semantics. These operations allow the type of indeterminate behaviour required by many parallel algorithms. The paper defines the improving values in the context of a functional programming language, but the technique can be used in a procedural program as well.

Ce document réunit les principaux indicateurs socio-économiques témoignant de l'évolution économique et sociale du Canada et des principaux pays de l'OCDE. Dans la première partie, on trouve des données provenant de la comptabilité nationale, des comptes provinciaux des revenus et des dépenses (produit intérieur brut, dépenses personnelles, revenu et épargne disponible) ainsi que des données sur le revenu du travail, sur le revenu familial et sur le marché du travail. Quant à la deuxième partie, elle porte plus précisément sur les habitudes de consommation des Canadiens des différentes régions du Canada. La troisième partie de ce rapport présente une comparaison sur le plan international des principaux indicateurs économiques caractérisant l'activité de la consommation, les performances industrielles et le positionnement des plus grands pays industrialisés. Enfin, on trouve en annexe un lexique des principaux termes utilisés.

by H.J. Ruitenbeek. Ottawa : Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, 1991. xi, 34 p. ISBN 0-662-19136-6 MICROLOG 92-02276 1 fiche

This paper looks at the principles of the new fundamentals, focusing on some of their key elements and how they are relevant in a policy context. It discusses how each of the main technical issues contributes to the conclusion that these principles are important and independent of the technical disagreement which can and does arise in specific indicator design. It also examines these fundamentals in the context of some specific example indicators. It concludes with a description of the next steps which might be taken in applying these fundamentals.

A comprehensive monitoring program was established to evaluate the indoor air quality of 20 new houses constructed as part of the Flair Homes Energy Demo/Canadian Home Builders' Association Flair Mark XIV Project in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Sixteen of the houses were constructed to the R-2000 standard and four to conventional energy conservation standards; all contained some type of mechanical ventilation system. Monitoring was carried out from March 1986-March 1989. Formaldehyde, radon daughter, particulate, nitrogen dioxide, carbon dioxide, and relative humidity levels were measured on a regular basis along with the total air change rates.

One potential barrier hindering wide acceptance of methanol fuel is the question of refuelling, storage and maintenance of a fleet of methanol vehicles, since most Canadian transit fleets perform these activities indoors because of climate. This study identified the risks involved with indoor fuelling, service and storage of methanol-powered transit buses; identified and addressed regulations applicable to indoor fuelling, service and storage; presented various approaches that may permit indoor fuelling, service and storage of methanol-powered buses at the Winnipeg Transit Osborne Street facility, and drew conclusions for other cities in Canada based on the examination for Winnipeg. The report does not examine any implementation strategies nor timetables to initiate the transition from diesel to methanol.

MICROLOG 92-00145 2 fiche

CanadianOxy Chemicals Ltd. presently operates a phenol-formaldehyde resin plant in the City of Fort Erie, Ontario, which produces a total of 12 million pounds per year of moulding compounds, industrial resins and foundry resins. The process involves a condensation polymerization reaction of phenol and formaldehyde in two batch processing kettles, producing water as a by-product. This water is distilled, condensed and collected in a distillate receiver, with the water containing about 5-8 percent phenol. The distillate is then hauled offsite for disposal. Costs in 1987 for this disposal were 280,000 dollars, with the value of phenol lost about 120,000 dollars. The company is considering measures to recover phenol from the distillate and to treat all effluents on-site to meet sewer discharge limits. This report presents the results of the pilot-scale evaluation of resin adsorption with formaldehyde regeneration which began in June 1989, as well as a revised economic assessment of the process.

Project to demonstrate the feasibility and cost of collecting and separating feed grade corrugated paper from other dry waste materials; to evaluate different processing methods to convert the raw material to a form suitable as a feed ingredient, and methods for mixing the processed material with common farm feeds; to establish the feeding value of processed corrugated paper in a practical livestock feeding system; and to determine the economic feasibility of using processed corrugated paper as a part of a practical livestock ration. A supply of clean corrugated waste paper was obtained from the Loeb IGA store in Alexandria. The material was processed using a wood chipper, a hammermill for feed grinding and mixing, and a standard forage harvester and fed to a 200-head herd of cattle. Results were compared with the feeding of high-quality hay and with grain feeding.

Mis sur pied en 1984, le projet sur l'Acidité des Lacs et les Canards, d'une durée de trois ans, avait pour but d'évaluer l'impact de l'acidification des lacs sur la survie de canetons élevés en nature. Ce projet a donné lieu à cette étude dont l'objectif principal était d'évaluer la disponibilité des proies pour les canetons élevés sur les lacs expérimentaux.
Ce rapport contient donc les résultats des observations sur les communautés aquatiques de trois lacs des moyennes Laurentides.

facteurs socio-économiques ont une grande influence sur le niveau d'instruction. Ce rapport résume les conclusions d'un examen empirique de cette importante question. Il aborde principalement le consensus et le désaccord, la question de terminologie, la perspective historique, la méthodologie, et les conclusions empiriques.

The Influence of socioeconomic background on education

This report summarizes an empirical investigation of the influence that socioeconomic factors have on education. Its specific contribution is the analysis of a large Canadian sample of individuals, using educational attainment (years of schooling) as the dependent variable. This contrasts with most studies of this sort, which have typically used smaller samples to evaluate young children's tests or examination scores as the outcome variable.

Influence of soil temperature on the effectiveness of ectomycorrhizal fungi in promoting white spruce seedling growth

by L.D. Husted. Victoria : Forest Resource Development Agreement, 1990. iii, 55 p. Bibliogr. (FRDA report ; 144) ISSN 0835-0752 ISBN 0-662-18218-9 MICROLOG 92-06346 1 fiche

The early growth of planted white spruce seedlings is less than satisfactory on many backlog reforestation sites in the northern interior of B.C. Artificial inoculation of conifer seedlings with specific ectomycorrhizal (ECM) fungi has been shown to improve field performance on some reforestation sites but it was not known if inoculation would benefit seedlings planted in cool forest soils. This project studied the influence of soil temperature on the effectiveness of various ECM fungi, their ability to colonize roots in a seedling nursery, to persist and colonize new roots in the field, and to improve the growth and physiology of white spruce seedlings.

Like the majority of commercial fish species with an external type of gamete union, Black Sea mullets are characterized by a high degree of fecundity and a low survival rate. This paper contains the results of experiments in the fecundation of various batches of mullet eggs with the genital products of prespawning males and fish put into a state of functional maturity by a pituitary injection.

Cette publication s'appuie sur les rapports d'information financière envoyés chaque année par toutes les municipalités de l'Ontario au ministère des Affaires municipales. Les données sont présentées par fonds, puisque les municipalités doivent déclarer leur situation financière selon ce mode de comptabilisation. Les chiffres consolidés sont établis en additionnant les opérations des fonds d'administration générale et de capital et en soustrayant les transferts interfonds au sein d'une municipalité. Les tableaux présentent les résultats globaux des administrations locales; l'analyse des mouvements du fonds d'administration générale des municipalités et du fonds de capital; les réserves et fonds de réserves; les impôts fonciers; les dettes à long terme; et la situation en fin d'exercice.

Initial environmental evaluation : commercial trucking in Kootenay National Park : final report

by B. Beswick and P. Biol. Ottawa : Environment Canada, Parks Service, 1991 v. 62 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-01781 1 fiche

Kootenay National Park is in the Rocky Mountains of southeastern B.C. The Kootenay Parkway bisects the park lengthwise, providing access to park facilities and linking Alberta and B.C. It has been used as a commercial trucking route since the early 1960s. In 1980, after industry requested increased truck access to Settler's Road, a connector to the parkway, an environmental assessment concluded that while long-term trucking operations could not be accepted, industrial users could continue to use Settler's Road while government and industry developed a mutually acceptable alternative. In 1988, a park management plan was prepared which again addressed the problem of commercial trucking. This Initial Environmental Evaluation (IEE) was prepared to examine the environmental implications of commercial transportation in Kootenay National Park, primarily along Kootenay Parkway and to investigate the conflicts between use of the Parkway by commercial vehicles and the protection of park resources and enjoyment of the park by visitors. It covers the project; park policy and national park values; existing environment and environmental impact; human use of the natural environment; impacts and mitigating measures; public consultation procedures; and knowledge deficiencies and outstanding issues.

This handbook is designed to enable people interested in trees to identify insects causing damage to them. All insect species or groups that have caused damage to larch, cedar and juniper in Canada east of the Rocky Mountains are included. The insect and/or its damage can be identified by means of flow chart keys using non-technical language along with 150 coloured illustrations. Biological sketches of the insect are given, and the need for control measures, along with the timing of application, is prescribed. Common names of insects are used generally, but the scientific names are also given in the text.

A wheelchair-accessible bus service has been operated across Newfoundland by CN Roadcruiser since February 1985. The coach, built by MCI, is equipped with a wheelchair lift developed, built and installed by TES Limited. As this lift was the first of its kind and it had been in operation for almost six years, it was necessary to inspect the coach to determine the condition of the lift and its effect on the structural integrity of the coach. This report describes the procedures and results of the inspection, and includes recommendations for future repair and maintenance of the lift and coach. The inspection covered the structure of the bus, the lift mechanism, the hydraulic system, the control/safety system, the platform locks, the doors, the interior, and the wheelchair and occupant restraints.

The depth of soil cover over buried water pipelines in the City of Calgary, as well as any northern urban area, is determined by the depth of frost penetration in the local soils during the winter months. In 1988, a research program was conducted in which trenches were filled with Granulite, a lightweight, insulating aggregate. These tests were very successful and the depth to the pipeline was shortened from 9 feet to 7 feet. In 1989-90, a further research program was conducted, since it was felt the 7 feet was conservative. The most recent test was conducted to establish the long-term stability of the thermal properties of Granulite and to assess the potential for optimizing the trench design by minimizing the required extent of Granulite further. Nine of the original trenches were equipped with permanent thermal conductivity probes and standpipes to facilitate measuring moisture content of the Granulite after burial over a long term. The new data was compared to the old, as well as that of a similar test program conducted in Edmonton at the same time.

In sub-Saharan Africa, as in most parts of the world, agricultural research has been strongly commodity oriented for commercial and large farm intensive production. As the interests of many governments, international organizations, and donors shifted towards solving the problems of small farmers, it was found that research approaches needed to change towards more holistic and multidisciplinary efforts. This workshop identified the needs and priorities for integrated research in the South African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC) countries and identified opportunities for regional collaboration among institutions and countries, including the involvement of networks. Eleven technical papers were presented along with two introductory and keynote addresses. Topics covered included the need for integrating research with natural resource management, agroforestry networks in Africa, the Kenyan dual-purpose goat program, integrated crop-livestock research, sorghum and millet improvement program, participatory research for rural communities in Zimbabwe, the role of NGOs in research and technology transfer, and land and waste management issues.

Abundance of arboreal lichens is a key feature of winter range for black-tailed deer. Lichen litterfall is very important when there are heavy and frequent snowfalls. Optimum conditions for the production of lichen litterfall are usually met in old growth stands rather than in second-growth stands. Forest managers would like to produce more lichen and litterfall in second-growth stands but must either make conditions optimum or inoculate the trees with more lichen fragments. This report gives the results of a project to produce a conceptual model of stand development, including the effects that management actions are expected to have on lichen development and litterfall potential, and to suggest one or more scenarios for creating stands that will produce lichen forage and also meet other criteria for winter range.

Discusses the integration of minority-language students into regular classrooms, and describes the results of a special study conducted at Forest Manor school. The author synthesizes current research in 2nd language (L2) teaching, and recommends Integrated Language Teaching (ILT) as the model for mainstreaming L2 students into the regular classroom. She discusses the various approaches embodied in the ILT model, and indicates how each promotes more effective programs. Topics include active learning, whole language activities, oracy, cooperative learning, and intercultural education. The implementation of L2 integration at Ford Manor is described, and the author's intervention in 3 classrooms (kindergarten, grade 3, the junior level) is outlined. The teacher's request for support, the work undertaken, and an evaluation of the collaboration are discussed. Specific recommendations for the North York board include: improving reception and monitoring procedures; facilitating effective parent and community involvement, and providing a comprehensive program of staff development.

This paper presents a review of the state of the art in intelligent decision support systems, showing what distinguishes them from other computer systems and how artificial intelligence techniques can be used to increase the power of decision support systems. Then the methodology of designing, developing and implementing a DSS is outlined: the various ways of representing the decision process; methods for evaluating system performance; the different theories that may serve as a foundation for decision support technology; initial system analysis and design phases; user needs; problems to be addressed; and intended users. Finally, the strengths and weaknesses of DSSs are pointed out and the use of artificial intelligence techniques are proposed as a good way of maintaining all the advantages while making up for the deficiencies of the traditional DSSs. Examples of intelligent DSSs currently under development are included.

An Intension-based model of nested epistemic processes -- Rev.

by R.F. Hadley. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1990. 45 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05421 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper presents a process-oriented model of belief and knowledge which permits the representation of nested propositional attitudes within first-order logic. The model (NIM for nested intensional model) is axiomatized, intensionally based, and sanctions inferences involving nested epistemic attitudes, with different agents and different times. Through the expedient of context-sensitive semantic conventions, NIM attains broad expressive power without resort to encumbering quotation marks, concatenation functions, or sense notation. NIM provides agents with a conceptual map, interrelating the concepts of knowledge, belief, truth, and a number of cognate concepts such as infers, retracts, and questions. The soundness and completeness of NIM as a formal, first-order theory are established and it is shown that, by varying an intensional parameter, NIM may be used either as a human-like cognitive model, or as a model of the epistemic processes of purely rational artificial agents (including truth maintenance systems).

An Interactive needs assessment using computer conferencing

by L.M. Harasim, L.D. McLean and J. Weinstein. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Educational Evaluation Centre, 1989. 12 p. (Technical paper ; no. 28) ONTIERIS: ON05832
MICROLOG 92 06938 1 fiche

Explores the design of an interactive needs assessment system. The aim is to enable professionals active in fields which do not allow supportive interprofessional consultation to identify and clarify their needs and to suggest ways of meeting these needs. Such a facility allows professionals to communicate at a time and place convenient to them, regardless of geographical distance. In contrast to a questionnaire, computer conferencing is able to provide a picture of the way needs change over time, and keep up-to-date with new information and modalities. It allows for assessment by policy makers of both transitory and lasting needs. The system not only allows assessment of needs, it also meets one important need: that of professionals to communicate with each other over common problems. Computer-mediated communications systems are already widely used for professional communication in government, business, research and educational communities. Enthusiasm shows that they are successfully and enthusiastically used even by participants with little or no previous computer expertise. Online conferences support an equitable pattern of communication and allows for reflection before response, since simultaneous interaction is not necessary. A 2-phase process is probably the most appropriate for an online needs assessment. The initial phase would be a pilot project involving a group of professionals close to the technical center of the conference. The second phase would be a full demonstration and refinement of the model in a computer conference linking professionals from a larger geographical area. The result would be a final report containing a full needs assessment and recommendations for further action.

La croissance du secteur des services est décrite dans un grand nombre de publications. La cause de ce phénomène est toutefois moins bien comprise. Une question en particulier a beaucoup retenu l'attention: le secteur des services a-t-il une dynamique propre ou dépend-il des activités de production dans le reste de l'économie? Ce document tente d'apporter une réponse à cette question en soulignant les liens qui existent entre industries de biens et industries de services.

The Interference potential of six different rights-of-way plant communities on ash, poplar, spruce and pine transplants

In 1989, Ontario Hydro adopted a policy to reduce the use of herbicides by increasing mechanical cutting in the vegetation control program, a change which would alter the vegetation composition of the right-of-way, with the potential to disrupt many of the stable communities developed due to the use of selective foliar herbicides. A survey of the vegetation on the transmission lines near Essa Transformer Station was conducted in 1987 which found six distinct plant communities on the rights-of-way, each dominated by different plant species. A study was begun in 1988 to assess the ability of these communities to interfere with the survival and growth of transplanted green ash, Carolina poplar, red pine, and white spruce saplings. This report presents the results of this study for the 1990 growing season.

The IPIRG program was an international group program managed by the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission and funded by a consortium of organizations from Canada, France, Italy, Japan, Sweden, Switzerland, Taiwan, the United Kingdom, and the United States. The program developed data to verify engineering methods for assessing the integrity of nuclear power plant piping that contains circumferential defects. The main focus was an experimental task that investigated the behaviour of circumferentially flawed piping and piping systems to high-rate loading typical of seismic events. A unique pipe loop test facility was designed and constructed with an expansion loop with over 30 m of 406 mm diameter pipe and five long radius elbows. Five experiments on flawed piping were conducted to failure with dynamic excitation. This report provides background information on leak-before-break and flaw evaluation procedures in piping; summarizes the technical results of the program; gives a relatively detailed assessment of the results from the various pipe fracture experiments and complementary analyses; and summarizes the advances in the state-of-the-art pipe fracture technology resulting from the IPIRG program.

A number of Elint databases exist that contain information on radar emitters, although the most detailed of them contain the information in the form of records and fields which cannot be handled by conventional database management systems. An Elint database browsing tool was developed, called DEBU, that allows the Elint databases to be easily reviewed and analyzed from a PC workstation. DEBU's basic function is to allow a user to examine the contents of user-selected subfiles of user-selected emitters of user-selected databases. This paper provides an introduction to DEBU, describes the current functionality, and gives its history and future plans. The paper is also a user's manual for DEBU Beta Version 2.0.

Ce guide a été préparé dans le but d'informer les compagnies, des facteurs à considérer et des techniques à utiliser, dans l'optique d'améliorer la planification des ressources humaines. Au début, on décrit les avantages de la planification des ressources humaines et fournit un schéma de l'arbre de décision du processus de planification. Pour la 1ère étape (établir l'offre) certains instruments utiles, pour établir le nombre et les différents types de ressources humaines d'une compagnie, sont suggérés: les dossiers de services de paie et du personnel; l'évaluation de la performance; la planification des carrières; l'inventaire d'aptitudes; et l'affichage d'emplois. Dans la 2e étape (établir la demande), les sujets suivants sont examinés: plans de stratégie; plans d'affaires; l'attrition; et le calcul de la demande. La 3e étape (faire correspondre l'offre et la demande), est décrite comme une étape intégrale de planification, indépendamment de la présence d'une pénurie ou d'un surplus. Quant à la 4e étape (établir un plan d'action), plusieurs suggestions sont fournies, dans des situations de pénurie (recrutements interne et externe; réorganisation du service, des tâches) ou de surplus en nombre/ou en genres (attrition normale; travail partagé; mise à pied temporaire; mise sur pied de nouveaux projets). Des schémas et des annexes complètent le document.

Remedial Action Plans (RAPs) identify and describe the environmental problem and extent of area affected; impaired uses; causes and pollution sources; remedial measures proposed; schedules for implementation; responsibilities for remedial measures and a process for monitoring implementation. Extensive public involvement is also included. The RAP program is now in a transitional phase from plan development to plan implementation. This report provides information in support of this transition, including the responsibilities of the Ontario Ministries of the Environment, Industry, Trade and Technology, Municipal Affairs, Natural Resources, and Tourism and Recreation.

Inventory of PCBs in pole top transformers

by A. Husain and R. Mowat. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. iv, 21 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-196-K)
 MICROLOG 92-04239 1 fiche

Ontario Hydro has about 300,000 pole-top transformers of different sizes distributed in the province. The mineral oil contained in these transformers is contaminated with PCBs with about 10 percent of the units containing PCBs over 50 ppm. The presence of PCBs in the transformers requires that scrapped PCB contaminated units be disposed of in an environmentally acceptable manner. This report contains a detailed assessment of the PCB inventory in pole-top transformers. Each transformer was dismantled into its various components. Samples of porous materials were extracted in isooctane using Soxhlet extraction units and the extract was analyzed for PCBs using gas chromatography. The nonporous surfaces were wiped with isooctane wetted Kimwipes which were then extracted in isooctane for analysis.

If a fixed link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island is constructed, it would travel through the centre of the Cape Jourimain National Wildlife Area. This document records the present avifaunal use of the area for comparison with previous records. Waterfowl surveys were begun 12 April 1989 at the time of the spring breakup and were conducted bi-weekly until just prior to the opening of the hunting season in October. Shorebird surveys were conducted weekly, beginning 6 July and ending 26 September. Surveys were conducted for breeding Willets on 30 May and 27 June, with the entire periphery of the salt and brackish marsh areas covered on foot by two observers. This report provides the results of the surveys.

Inventory of waste oil volumes generated in the western Northwest Territories

Stanley Associates Engineering. Yellowknife : Renewable Resources, Pollution Control Division, 1990. 35 p.
 MICROLOG 92-01463 1 fiche

In 1987, an inventory of waste oil was compiled to provide a basis for the assessment of alternative strategies. This report updates that inventory, providing more precise estimates where possible and including new waste oil generators, if any. Accurate records are kept only by large oil companies, mining companies, utilities, and the larger airlines. Quantities provided by smaller companies are considered best estimates. All larger generators were interviewed, and a cross-section of smaller waste oil producers was contacted. Data are compiled by type of oil, producing category, geographic region, disposal method and quantities in storage, comparison with 1987 results, and sensitivity to economic activity.

This report presents the results of a study to review the current practice and develop practical guidelines for geotechnical investigation, analysis and design of mine dumps in B.C. While it is recognized that environmental, land use and related issues must also be addressed, they are not the focus of this document. As part of the study, a survey of dumps at 31 active mines was undertaken and synopses on 83 individual dumps were prepared and are included. Contributions to the guide were solicited from mine operators, regulatory agencies, research and industry groups, and geotechnical consultants. BC NR PR PS SC

Charge-coupled devices (CCDs) are widely used in military and commercial imaging and sensor applications such as satellite-based remote sensing systems. Errors can be generated by the interaction of ionizing radiation with the semiconductor material of the CCD. This report summarizes the experimental and analytical techniques used to investigate the creation of errors in a linear array CCD by energetic alpha particles, which are similar to the particulate ionizing radiation that space vehicles are subjected to in the near-earth environment. Investigation of problems related to crawl space construction in British Columbia. Research was carried out between June 1990 and February 1991 and included a literature review, a survey of present crawl space construction practices in B.C., and the selection and investigation of 10 case study houses in Greater Vancouver and the Fraser Valley. The 10 house samples included crawl space constructions of similar types, with different types of heating and ventilation systems (vented or non-vented, forced-air or radiant heated). Four of the houses investigated had experienced some degree of moisture problems that had required expensive remedial measures. A procedure previously developed for testing airtightness of attic spaces was used in nine of the case study houses. • BC CA PL SC

Flame arresters can play a key role in an overall industrial explosion protection strategy, along with other techniques such as purging, gas detection, inerting, and implementation of correct operating procedures. Because users, manufacturers, regulatory agencies, and other interests require a quantification of the minimum level of performance afforded by these devices, there has recently been an increasing amount of national and international interest in the development of flame arrester performance standards. The first part of the report provides a description of continuous burn tests performed on flame arresters, the results obtained, a discussion of the mechanisms involved, and some conclusions concerning continuous burn performance. The second part of the report provides an analysis and discusses the technical validity of U.S. Coast Guard continuous burn requirements. • CA CM PS SC

Erie Battery Inc. processes waste batteries by draining the sulphuric acid, breaking the battery cases, and recovering the lead plates and casing plastic. The acid is retained in a storage tank for removal by a waste hauler and the other material is removed from the property for refining and recycling. The company admitted that liquid that had accumulated in the well of a truck loading dock was pumped out and discharged to an area adjacent to the west side of the building in January 1991. Ten sites were sampled, including those likely to have been influenced by the discharge, and a number of control sites. Samples were analyzed for lead, antimony, sulphur, sulphate, and pH. Investigated the effects of a 2-year teacher in-service program ("Class Acts") and the changes in classroom practices that resulted. 37 Class Acts participants completed a questionnaire which was designed to provide information about how the participant received information about the program and the motivation for becoming involved, whether internal or external, as well as the number of years of teaching experience at the junior level. All of the groups, whether internally or externally motivated, and regardless of teaching experience, reported that they had changed their classroom practices. The direction of reported changes seemed to be toward cooperative learning. Changes in the classroom included: changes in task assignment, student groupings, classroom layout, planning, planning materials, and methods of student evaluation. Alterations in the participants' beliefs were difficult to determine, however. The study indicated several problems: lack of support from teachers' colleagues and administrators; lack of resources and planning materials; and lack of time. Recommendations included: holding inservice sessions over a long period of time; having a planned, systematic approach to change; and, in order to be effective, trying to meet the needs of internally motivated and externally motivated participants in different ways. The importance of recognizing the individual, developmental nature of teacher change is emphasized. ED LA ON PR

To date ionizing radiation has been tested only as an agent for cancer initiation, the first step in the multi-step carcinogenesis model. The action of chronic radiation in the other two steps of carcinogenesis (promotion and progression) has not been tested. This study was conducted to determine whether ionizing radiation, delivered chronically to tissue, acts as a tumour promoting or progressing agent for chemically-initiated carcinogenesis. The dorsal skins of 25 female SENCAR mice were chemically initiated with a single exposure to DMBA, and chronic exposure to strontium-90/yttrium-90 beta radiation was tested as a stage I, stage II or complete skin tumour promoter. Another similar group was chemically promoted through stage I with TPA followed by 0.5 gray of beta radiation twice a week for 13 weeks.

Iron budgets in temperate lakes : report

MICROLOG 92-04113 1 fiche

Iron is an important element in lakes because of its chemical and biological interactions with other lake constituents, its importance to phytoplankton, and its control of the concentration and movement of nutrients like phosphate and toxic metals (cadmium, lead, cobalt) in the water column. This study measured iron mass balances of several lakes on the Precambrian Shield and pooled these data with all available quantitative information on iron fluxes in other North American and European lakes. A general model used iron budgets to predict annual iron concentrations. The predictive capability of a simple mass balance model similar to that used successfully for phosphorus was evaluated. The components of the mass balance model, such as retention and external and internal load, were investigated to determine whether iron retention depends on lake morphometry and hydrology, as is the case for retention of other substances. An average settling velocity from relationships of retention with hydrological characteristics was also determined. Throughout the analysis, iron originating from external sources such as runoff from the terrestrial catchment and atmospheric deposition on the lake's surface was separated from internal sources such as the anoxic sediment surfaces.

It also addresses the curriculum and the "really useful knowledge." It argues that the roots of many of the problems faced by girls and women in our society can be found in the educational system--in the material that is taught, in how it is taught, and in how girls' perceptions of themselves and the world around them are shaped. Finally, it discusses teaching and the governance of education.

MICROLOG 92-00604 2 fiche

This report is the result of an in-depth study of the housing situation in Jasper, Alberta, initiated by the Jasper Town Committee and the Canadian Parks Service in response to growing community concern about the increasing lack of affordable housing and an awareness of the need to plan for some amount of future growth. Information was obtained through individual interviews with about 20 residents/business people, by telephone interviews with others from November 1990 to March 1991, and from a March 1991 comprehensive housing survey of 409 residents. The report discusses in detail the current condition of Jasper's housing market; gives a comprehensive inventory of housing; presents the responses of the community; discusses the economics of multi-family housing construction and legislation and regulations which have a direct impact on the housing market, summarizing the land release programs of the past 15 years; projects housing demand for the next decade; and sets out a series of recommendations for action by Parks Canada, the Jasper Town Committee, and Jasper employers.

Ottawa : Employment and Immigration Canada, 1990. 2 v. : maps. Contents: Vol. 1 : Occupational outlooks -- vol. 2 : Experience of recent graduates. French ed. (Perspectives professionnelles...) : 92-01338/9 CSI 21126.003. ISSN 0843-5359 ISBN 17-602793-9 MICROLOG 92-01337 9 fiche

This document is organized according to occupation as described in the Standard Occupational Classification. Each occupational group has two pages of information devoted to it, one page of statistical data, and one of descriptive and analytical text. The statistical tables are designed for quick and easy reference which allows the reader a ready overview of the labour market situation of the particular occupational group. The narrative texts contain brief job function descriptions, information on working conditions, educational requirements, age and sex trends, career ladders, and the effects of technological change, labour market assessments; notes on seasonality of employment; notes on sensitivity to changes in the business cycle; and data on earnings. A joint Canada-U.S. field survey was carried out on the Firth River, Yukon Territory and Alaska from September 13-19, 1989 to familiarize Canadian and U.S. personnel with the field conditions at the Firth River and to evaluate aerial and underwater photography and seining as methods of enumeration of charr in this system. The results will be used to develop a detailed research program to assess the charr resources in the River. Three locations were examined at ground level and a record of the field survey was made on videotape. This report presents the results of the survey. ● CA CF FI LS NO SC

A Joint submission to the Legislative Committee on Bill C-43, an Act Respecting Abortion presented by the Atlantic Canada Provincial Advisory Councils on the Status of Women. Halifax : Nova Scotia Advisory Council on the Status of Women, 1990. 22 p.

MICROLOG 92-01484 1 fiche

Since the historic judgement of 1988 concerning the abortion law, the government has tried to present resolutions for approval concerning the regulation of abortion in Canada. However, these resolutions failed for a lack of a majority vote in the House of Commons. A new bill (C-43) was proposed to fill the vacuum left by the 1988 decision, a vacuum which encouraged and prompted widespread discussion on accessibility to abortion services in Canada. This document discusses the re-criminalization of abortion, women's access to abortion services, and regulation on a national basis.

The relative height growth performance of various tree species on common sites with well-defined site quality is therefore of considerable interest. This report identifies 80 key habitat sites for migratory birds in the Northwest Territories. A key habitat site is a terrestrial area that supports at least 1% of the Canadian population of at least one migratory bird species (or sub-species). Sites also include marine and freshwater habitats where the value of a terrestrial habitat is intimately linked to the presence of aquatic habitats. Data for the identification of sites were drawn from existing published and unpublished reports and personal communications. The first version of the report was published in 1984 and this second edition adds 20 new sites. Information on each site includes name, location, size, description, biological value, sensitivities, potential conflicts, and status. A map and a list of references are also included. Summary of the results of an adaptive environmental assessment workshop conducted in February 1991 to produce an analysis of the possible effects of fertilization on the Kootenay Lake pelagic system. The modelling process first set terms of reference (policy options, variables to be considered) and produced a first working version, which was then refined and developed into the final working model at the workshop. The report covers the general model structure, giving an overview of the model structure, space, and time scales used in the various submodel calculations, data used to test the model predictions, and specific policy options now included in the simulation program for further policy exploration. Further detail on the submodels and policy options is given in the description of submodels and linkages. The model users guide provides a general users guide to the program. Key uncertainties in model predictions of response to fertilization are summarized and research priorities are recommended to help resolve these uncertainties in conjunction with a large-scale fertilization experiment on the lake. Development of satisfactory numerical models for fracture formation and propagation in the oil sands of Alberta is considered to be an important requirement for the future of the oil industry. This report describes the first phase of a project to gain a better understanding of the fundamental mechanisms of fracturing of unconsolidated sand formations. The project is based on carrying out hydraulic fracturing in a large scale triaxial stress chamber, which allows the major factors controlling the fracture process to be measured or controlled. This Phase I study provided a preliminary indication of the mechanisms of hydraulic fracturing under conditions of high leakoff using a single fluid for pore saturation and injection and maintaining a vertical minor principal stress so that predominantly horizontal fractures were anticipated.

This report presents the second phase of a joint industry laboratory testing project carried out to enhance the mathematical formulations of models by providing data to calibrate and verify the models currently employed for fracture analysis. The testing studied the propagation of leak off dominated fractures. A series of laboratory injection simulations on homogeneous sand were carried out in a large triaxial stress chamber. The test sand was saturated with a highly viscous liquid, and injected with the same liquid, but dyed for differentiation. Constant pressure (below the minimum effective confining stress applied to the sample) injectivity tests, permeability tests, and steady state fracture tests (sample injected with undyed liquid at constant flow rate) were carried out prior to the fracture tests. Specimens taken from the large scale fracture sample were examined using magnetic resonance imaging to study the pattern of fracture in more detail.

Labour is exchanged in a market best described as being in a constant state of flux. Recent estimates suggest that more than four million people secure employment each year, while a similar number become unemployed or leave the labour market. Conditions in this market throughout the last decade and the beginning of the 1990s were influenced by a number of factors, the chief of which include two major recessions, disproportionate growth in regional employment and an increase in the incidence of long-term unemployment. This review focuses on these and other developments in the labour market that have occurred since the beginning of the last decade.

This report examines the provincial training needs arising from previous labour market analyses. It looks at forces within the economy and trends within the labour market that affect training needs. It also identifies to what extent these needs have changed through such factors as the provision of training, changes in the economy, industry demands, new political developments, and other external influences. Finally, it recommends ways to upgrade the skill level of the provincial labour force, including continuing to identify critical areas and a strategic direction for the Open

College and Workplace Training Systems.

A major problem with the point system was that it eventually became overrun with exceptions, deviations and special permissions, generally poorly documented, and giving the appearance of arbitrary, ambiguous and inconsistent decisions. Acceptance of the Quota Entitlement System by both fishermen and the Executive is dependent upon developing a system of checks and balances that would protect individuals and communities from the negative aspects of transferability. This document lists a number of procedures which were clarified, giving the objective of the revision, the change, and the procedures involved in applying the revision.

Rented cropland makes up an important part of the total cropland operated by Ontario farmers. This study, conducted by the Policy Analysis Branch, is an update of similar studies conducted in 1988, 1987 and 1984. In addition to reporting on land rental rates, the current study collected information on availability and demand of land for rent as well as the date of rental agreements. Respondents were asked to report the crops grown on the land rented and the yield they expected for these crops. This study also compares land rental rates paid in 1991 versus the rent paid in 1990.

The Forest Resources Commission was established in 1989 to examine the state of B.C.'s forest land base and to recommend ways to improve its management. This report advises how the Commission's proposal for a Land Use Commission could be made to work in practice. A set of design considerations were developed for a generic land use planning model and recommendations are given based on this. This report describes the major features of the proposed Land Use Commission model; the need for provincial leadership in the land use planning system; a description of a comprehensive land use planning system; and the establishment of a Land Use Commission model.

Though little is known about larval distribution along the Scotian Shelf, workers hypothesized that warmer temperatures and possibly enhanced food availability within these protected embayments would enhance larval survival. Sampling, using twin, one-metre square, flowmeter-equipped neuston nets, was carried out from mid-afternoon to early the following morning once weekly, over 10 weeks, from July 22-September 22, 1998. Water temperature, salinity, and light intensity were measured concurrently. Seventy-nine surface tows were completed.

Catalyst materials were subjected to thermal processing by radiation from a low power CW CO2 laser, a new method of catalyst processing that has been shown to be particularly useful for regeneration of coked-spent hydrodesulphurization catalysts. The regeneration process requires intensities of about 50 W/sq cm with multiple particle irradiation dwell times, each of one second duration. A laser regeneration unit capable of processing 150 g batches of spent catalyst extrudates was constructed and tested. Catalysts regenerated by this process were examined by mercury porosimetry, elemental analysis by proton induced X-ray emission (PIXE), Fourier transform infra-red spectroscopy (FTIR), and scanning electron microscopy (SEM). A comparison of energy consumption to regeneration in a conventional furnace of approximately the same capacity was also done.

A study of 18 families where both parents or the single parent were in paid employment. Schools and families with children in school are considered to be engaged in the shared work of rearing and educating children. The actual work practices which link the family to the school are examined by focusing on the strategies used by family members to manage the uncoordinated schedules of the school and the labour market. Interviews were also carried out with agencies and organizations in Toronto and Oshawa. The study compares school families by education and income, work schedules, mother's work, and mobility. Family strategies for child care are examined by morning and after school scheduling strategies, schools and communities, lunch time practices, and professional development days and holidays. How schools connect to families is also examined.

The Task Force was directed to develop recommendations on key short-term issues related to employment and training. It was to recommend long-term strategies to improve the employability of B.C. workers and to increase employment opportunities. It was also to recommend a permanent mechanism for keeping industry, labour, and the provincial government advised of concerns about employment and training. This executive summary presents the findings of the Task Force.

Learning for living : strategies for promoting family development : study paper

by F.J. Morgan. Edmonton : Government of Alberta, 1990. 22 p. Bibliogr. Prepared for the Lieutenant-Governor's Conference--Celebrating Alberta's Families.
MICROLOG 92-00932 1 fiche

This paper discusses learning as a tool for family development. Within the context of predictable and non-predictable events in families, the problems of inconsistency in children's learning and incongruity in children's development are presented. It provides examples of incongruence and inconsistency to support the need for the development of continuous learning and congruent development of skills and behaviours in children as they grow. It presents learning as a process leading to change in behaviour. It also provides a model for using life long learning as a tool for family development for discussion purposes.

Presents user feedback on various aspects of learning online. The data presented here is from a graduate course offered entirely online at OISE in the fall of 1988. 4 sets of questionnaires were sent out to every participant in the course. Each centred around a particular theme. Week 1 asks about the areas of uploading and downloading, week 2 about pragmatic and problematic aspects of the students' use of the medium for course work, week 3 on the organization of online course work, and week 4 explores reactions to various components of the course process. Presents an analysis of the answers, and comments for future research.

Identifies trends in leisure behaviour with a view to developing relevant programming for Ontarians. The information is derived from government reports. Chapter 1 gives an introduction to leisure; describes the studies which form the basis of the report; and summaries the major findings. Chapter 2 describes the most common activities. Chapter 3 gives the leisure pursuits of Ontarians by ethnocultural background. Chapter 4 deals with young Ontarians. Each chapter ends with demographic findings, implications, and programming ideas. Media-related activities were, by far, the most popular activities with reading, listening to the radio, and television viewing being at the top of the list. Inter- and intrapersonal activities were next in general popularity, with socializing with or entertaining family and friends the most popular pastimes. Sports, fitness, recreational, and outdoor pursuits were next most common, with walking being the most popular. Of the arts and cultural activities, attending entertainment events was most common. The level of arts and cultural knowledge of Ontarians was found to be quite poor overall. Ethnocultural and young Ontarians were found to differ very little in their leisure interests and behaviour from the average Ontarian. The data for these groups should be used to determine the scope of the potential audience for programming. ED ON PR

This report presents length-frequency data on the cyprinid populations of dace, fathead minnow, linescale dace, and northern redbelly dace in Lake 302 in the Experimental Lakes Area of northwestern Ontario. Lake 302 is a small, double-basin lake, with each basin undergoing acidification since June 1982. One basin received additions of nitric acid from 1982-86 and of hydrochloric acid from 1987-90. The other basin received additions of sulphuric acid from 1982-90. Fish were sampled monthly during 1982 and 1983 and seasonally (spring and fall) from 1984-90. Each fish was measured for fork length to the nearest millimetre. Length-frequency histograms were constructed on a monthly basis for each species of fish.

Opening pages consist of an introduction and projected learning outcomes. 3 sections allow students to acquire knowledge of the physical environment, and develop appropriate attitudes. Each topic is discussed in terms of intent, learning outcomes, materials, procedure, and background materials. Section 1 is concerned with making a pin-hole magnifier, using curved containers to make magnifiers; using a lens; projecting an image onto a piece of paper; and using more than one lens. Section 2 deals with the use of microscopes: viewing various objects under the microscope (identifying solids, classifying items, calculating the field of vision); preparing and staining wet-slides; and observing a sample of pond water. Section 3 outlines procedures for observing crystals under the microscope and provides instructions for constructing a microprojector.

Levels of metals and metallothionein in fish of the Columbia River near the international boundary

by A.L. Smith. Victoria : Ministry of Environment and Parks ; Ottawa : Environment Canada, 1987. xi, 133 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-04700 2 fiche

Since 1980, a joint study comparing levels of mercury and other metals to guidelines has been conducted on fish from the Columbia River upstream from the International Boundary. The work was expanded to include trend monitoring, and metallothionein levels in fish livers were measured as a potential indicator of environmental stress. The major source of metals in the area is Cominco Ltd.'s lead-zinc smelter and fertilizer complex at Trail. This study evaluated concentrations of heavy metals, especially mercury, in fish in relation to Food and Drug Directorate Guidelines for edible fish flesh; compared the metal levels in Columbia River fish with levels reported in fish from other areas; selected the most desirable species to establish trends and recommend the frequency for monitoring; monitored temporal trends in metal concentrations in fish tissues, compared concentrations of metals in fish collected above and below the major known metal input, the Cominco complex at Trail, and evaluated sublethal effects on fish of elevated concentrations of metals in the environment. Metals were monitored in muscle and liver tissue from several species of fish, and metallothionein concentrations were monitored in livers of rainbow trout.

by D. Fass. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1989. 18 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05700 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

In linguistics and natural language processing, language is described and theorized about in terms of constraints. Given that lexical semantics is the study of the meaning of words, the constraints that are the most natural focus for lexical semantics research are constraints on the meanings of words. This paper investigates a number of lexical semantic constraints, including selectional restrictions (also known as preferences), assertions, relevance, salience, and restrictions on the internal semantic structure of nouns and verbs. Le 24 septembre 1990, le ministre du Commerce extérieur, M. John Crosbie, a annoncé que le Canada prendrait part aux pourparlers avec les Etats-Unis et le Mexique en vue de la création d'une zone de libre-échange nord-américain de plus de 350 millions de consommateurs. Les zones franches que le Mexique a créées dans cette région exercent un grand attrait non seulement sur les entreprises américaines et canadiennes, mais sur celles d'autres pays désireux de maintenir leur compétitivité sur le marché mondial. Ce document porte sur ces zones franches ou 'maquiladoras', comme on les appelle au Mexique.

The Northwest Territories Housing Corporation presently uses oil-fired boilers and furnaces to heat their stock of housing units. An alternative heating system which uses a domestic hot water tank for both space heating and hot water heating was installed in several housing units on a pilot basis. This report presents the results of a project to establish and compare the life cycle costs of both a domestic hot water tank space heating system and a boiler space heating system; to determine if there are higher efficiency domestic hot water tanks on the market and what can be done to improve existing efficiency rates; and to research other space heating alternatives and determine their cost effectiveness.

Alewives and blueback herring are closely related anadromous clupeids native to the Atlantic coast of North America, including Nova Scotia. They are collectively called gaspereau in the Maritime Provinces and have been fished commercially during their upstream spawning migrations for over a century. Commercial landings of both species are usually reported as alewives because of similarities in appearance, spawning, and methods of capture. This report presents the results of a 1985 study to determine the run composition, life history characteristics, and status of commercially exploited stocks of gaspereau from the Tusket, Medway, Ship Harbour, Little West, and Salmon (Guysborough Co.) rivers.

In 1987, the Cumberland Sound winter-spring Greenland halibut fishery began and it has since developed into a locally important commercial enterprise. During the course of this development, it was necessary to set guidelines for the establishment of quotas and management of the fishery. This report is a review of the literature on this species, especially the population or stock that inhabits Davis Strait. A brief synopsis of the Greenland halibut fisheries in the northwest Atlantic is also included. The report includes a description of the Greenland halibut, its distribution and habits, reproduction and recruitment, feeding habits, growth, temperature preference, mortality, predators, stock identification, biomass estimates, fishery management, and a description of the Cumberland Sound fishery.

Light attenuation as a function of depth was measured in 52 Experimental Lakes Area lakes for periods as long as 22 years (1969-90). 3,507 light attenuation depth profiles). The attenuation coefficient was calculated for data points in the mixed-layer (epilimnion) of each depth profile as functions of time; one lake is shown per graph, and common axes are used for all graphs to facilitate comparisons. The result is a concise summary of a massive database, showing the quantity of data available for each lake, how transparency differs among lakes, and how transparency varies within each lake over time in response to whole lake manipulation experiments and/or natural variability.

Cette courbe montre le rapport entre la quantité d'eau fournie et les coûts totaux pour le service en question. A la deuxième étape, la courbe des coûts marginaux est établie d'après la pente de la courbe des coûts totaux. La troisième étape consiste à tracer la courbe de la demande totale d'eau d'après les données fournies par ce rapport. Enfin, le point d'intersection de la courbe de demande d'eau et de la courbe des coûts marginaux donne la valeur du coût marginal de l'eau. CA MU NR PW SC

Many proposed and existing languages for parallel computing support dynamic process creation and allow processes to synchronize in arbitrary ways. This paper considers a system where processes may be created dynamically as a computation progresses and may synchronize with other processes in an arbitrary way, assuming that a process cannot be moved once it has started. The paper shows that the order in which processes are scheduled may make a spectacular difference in the performance of the program, particularly in speeding up the processes, although in practice it is not likely to have sufficient information to be able to determine which process should be scheduled and therefore it is not possible to avoid bad schedules. BC PR PS SC and manufacturers across Canada were surveyed to select candidate vehicles and tank configurations. Overturning limits of tank vehicles were investigated using a kineto-static roll plan model. A three-dimensional tank-vehicle model, incorporating a steady-state fluid slosh model, was developed and computer simulation was performed to determine directional stability for various manoeuvres, fill levels, vehicle speeds, and tank design factors. A comparison of directional response characteristics of tank vehicles with liquid and equivalent rigid cargo was conducted. Literate thought by D.R. Olson. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1989. 20 p. Bibliogr. ONTERIS: ON05824.

MICROLOG 92-06914 1 fiche

Propounds the theory that literacy aids in the development of thought, primarily through the evolution of a metalanguage for discussing, evaluating and commenting upon text. (Text is defined as the talk, thought or writing of others.) The author points out that previous 'myths' of literacy have largely been debunked over the past two decades; hence the need for a reexamination of the relationship between literacy and thought. The new literacy hypothesis seeks to define which, if any, features of modernity are related to the development of modern forms of expression and communication. The ambiguity of non-literate forms of communications, such as oracles, is contrasted with the literate notion of a 'fixed' text, wherein objective meaning can be clearly distinguished from subjective interpretation. The author suggests that once this distinction between text and interpretation has been made, that distinction can be used for other literate purposes where such a split is necessary, such as science and law. The conditions necessary for the development of literacy include: a means of 'fixing' and accumulating texts; an institution (such as the church, the law courts, the government, the academy) for using the texts, thus giving them cognitive significance; institutions (primarily the school) for inducting learners into those institutions; and the evolution of a metalanguage and a mental language for talking and thinking about those accumulated texts.

Geological mapping of the South Mountain Batholith was undertaken from 1984 to 1989. In addition to the mapping, a geochemical program was conducted to establish the compositions of individual granitic rock units within the batholith, as determined by field mapping. The lithogeochemical data contained in this report represents part of this detailed mapping program and included data from the western part of the batholith mapped in 1988. One hundred forty-one samples were collected to represent the full range of textures and compositions to determine local variations of lithological units and to represent uniform coverage geographically to determine any regional variations of the units.

In the early 1980s, a program was begun to evaluate the oil shale resources of the Albert Formation by undertaking a geological lithofacies study of the Albert strata in the Moncton Subbasin of southeastern New Brunswick. Most rock exposures of the Albert were examined from 1982-84 and additional field work was carried out in the summers of 1989 and 1990. In January 1989, 1,900 km of Vibroseis seismic reflection profiles shot from 1981-84 by Chevron Canada Resources Ltd. in the Moncton and Sackville subbasins became publicly available. This report gives the results of the geological investigations on the Albert Formation in the southeastern Moncton Subbasin and the integration of interpreted seismic reflection profiles to help resolve some of the geological problems encountered.

A local tournament is a digraph in which the out-set as well as the in-set of every vertex is a tournament. These digraphs have recently been found to share many desirable properties of tournaments. This paper illustrates this property by giving algorithms to find a hamiltonian path and cycle in a local tournament. It mentions several characterizations and recognition algorithms of graphs orientable as local tournaments and it turns out that they are precisely the graphs previously studied as proper circular arc graphs. Thus new recognition algorithms are obtained for proper circular arc graphs. The paper also gives a more detailed structural characterization of chordal graphs that are orientable as local tournaments.

Social scientists are often interested in analyzing rates for rare events such as homicide and suicide. This paper demonstrates how rates can be modelled and standardized for age and gender compositions simultaneously by using log-linear rate models. SPSSx LOGLINEAR can be applied to this task by using the exposures for the cell counts as weights. The parameter estimates from fitted models are easily interpretable as the degree to which variables add to or subtract from the overall rate. The log-linear rate model with simultaneous standardization is a flexible method to test competing hypotheses. Youth suicide in Canada for 1971 and 1981 is used as an empirical example to demonstrate the application of log-linear rate modelling with simultaneous standardization.

Les pays au climat froid, comme le Canada, contribuent démesurément au stress environnemental, en raison d'une consommation supérieure d'énergie, d'eau et d'autres ressources par habitant et d'une production élevée de polluants nuisibles à l'air, à l'eau et au sol. Depuis deux ans, la Société canadienne d'hypothèques et de logement (SCHL), l'agence fédérale de l'habitation, examine résolument les moyens d'ajouter à la durabilité des logements au Canada. Ce document décrit sommairement le lien entre le logement en climat froid et la crise environnementale, propose une définition au sens large de la durabilité en regard du logement canadien et en expose les conséquences pour les concepteurs et les constructeurs d'habitations.

Cet ouvrage est un guide de conception de logements pour personnes âgées qui sont suffisamment autonomes pour vivre seules dans des maisons séparées ou en appartement, avec ou sans certains services. Le guide vise à faciliter le travail de ceux qui désirent parrainer, financer, concevoir, construire, gérer ou administrer des logements réservés aux personnes âgées. Il comprend des informations complètes sur certaines décisions qu'il convient de prendre lors de la conception de logements de ce type. Son but est de favoriser l'autonomie et la dignité de ces personnes par le biais d'une conception sensée et de promouvoir la construction d'immeubles permettant d'atteindre ce but.

L'apparition des micro-ordinateurs dans les écoles a fait naître chez les usagers une demande de plus en plus grande de logiciels, tant sous forme d'utilitaires que d'applications pédagogiques. Il était donc impératif de doter les écoles d'un nombre suffisant d'ordinateurs pour répondre au besoin sans cesse croissant des usagers. Grâce à une aide substantielle en vertu de l'entente fédérale-provinciale dans le Cadre Stratégie jeunesse, le Ministère de l'Éducation a pu négocier une entente avec quelques distributeurs de logiciels, lui accordant des licences de reproduction pour les écoles d'expression française de la province. Ces licences donnent le droit de reproduire ces logiciels et documents en quantité suffisante pour répondre aux besoins des usagers à l'intérieur des écoles d'expression française de la province. L'adoption de la Loi sur les jeunes contrevenants (LJC) a marqué le début d'une époque nouvelle dans le traitement des adolescents qui enfreignent le droit criminel. La LJC suit ce qu'on appelle le modèle 'justice' de la justice criminelle appliquée aux adolescents. Ce modèle tient compte lui aussi des besoins spéciaux et de la vulnérabilité des jeunes, mais il insiste aussi autant sur la protection du public que sur les droits des adolescents. Ce bulletin d'actualité se penche précisément sur la Loi sur les jeunes contrevenants.

During most of the nursery regime used to grow planting stock in containers, cultural factors are manipulated to ensure rapid shoot and root growth. Towards the end of the regime, however, the seedlings must be prepared or hardened to withstand either the 4-6 months cold storage preceding field planting or an overwintering outdoors in low temperatures. This hardening phase involves the forming of resting buds, lignification of stem tissue, and development of cold hardiness. This report describes the results of experiments undertaken to determine the relative effectiveness of long-night (16 hours for 4 weeks) and moisture stress treatments in modifying the physical and physiological quality of one-year-old container-grown Douglas-fir planting stock.

MICROLOG 92-05887 1 fiche

In the mid-1970s, Manitoba Hydro impounded Southern Indian Lake and diverted much of the flow of the Churchill River, which flowed through the lake, into the Nelson River catchment for hydroelectric power generation. A dramatic decline in the burrowing mayfly populations following lake manipulation was originally attributed to the physical effects of impoundment and diversion. Further monitoring showed a recovery of the population despite the ongoing physical effects, so other factors were investigated in an attempt to explain the post-impoundment decline. Populations were sampled in 1972 before impoundment and diversion, in 1977 after impoundment but before full diversion, in 1979 after diversion, and every two years thereafter until 1987. Samples were collected during mid-July along with temperature, turbidity, and sediment particle size distribution. Station abundances were averaged for each region or for the whole lake to yield regional and whole-lake abundances. This report presents the results of the investigation.

An experimental contour trench system for subsurface disposal of septic tank effluent from a group of dwellings was installed at Port Maitland in southwestern Nova Scotia in 1982 because of failing individual septic systems. A contour trench disposal field is a relatively narrow and shallow disposal bed constructed in a trench of constant depth, dug along a contour of the ground surface, such that the trench bottom and the lip of the trench wall are absolutely horizontal throughout the entire length. The Port Maitland system was originally monitored from 1982-84, then the site was revisited and monitored from May 1989 to June 1990 to assess the long-term hydraulic and treatment performance of the system. Piezometer nests remaining from the original study were re-used. Samples were collected, and groundwater depths observed, on seven occasions. Analyses were conducted for bacteriological and chemical parameters.

What are the policies aimed at reducing LTU? The analysis drew on data from a wide range of sources including the Labour Force Survey, the Labour Market Activities Survey, the Annual Work Patterns Survey, and the gross flows data.

Presents research that shows the mothers of hearing-impaired children use a more controlling style of interaction than those of normal children. The study assesses the relationship between maternal control and the communicative competence of preschool-aged children with severe and profound hearing losses. Evidence indicates the degree of control shown by mothers of hearing-impaired children is partly a response to their children's lesser language capabilities. Findings have implications for the development of a training program to facilitate communication between mothers and hearing-impaired children.

Effluent discharges from the Edmonton area, such as from the sewage treatment plant, are being reassessed using water quality models. One of the first steps in this assessment process is to determine the hydraulic and mixing characteristics of the river system downstream from the effluent outfall during the critical low flow periods. Tracer dye studies were therefore conducted on the North Saskatchewan River between Edmonton and the Saskatchewan border in March and October of 1990 to measure travel times and to determine the longitudinal dispersion characteristics in this river reached during low flows. ### Making a molehill out of a mountain II : implementing the three R's in residential construction

Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation ; Toronto : Toronto Home Builders' Association ; Ministry of the Environment, 1991. 26 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 92-04316 1 fiche

The residential construction industry is a major contributor to the waste management problem through the demolition of old buildings, the renovation of the aging housing stock, and the wastes produced in the construction of new homes, all of which adds up to 5 percent of the total volume of wastes in landfill sites. Non-residential demolition and construction represents a further 9 percent. This document is centred around reducing waste at source, reusing what would normally be landfilled, and recycling materials for which there is no immediate reuse. It presents a waste management plan for the industry, describes how to perform a waste audit, explains the concept of the three Rs, discusses changing site procedures, and gives suggestions to implement reduction, reuse, and recycling of materials.

This report is an examination of recommended and actual school-based guidance policies, programs, and practices for young adolescents. The information is drawn from Canadian and international publications, and from a survey of guidance and career education programs for grades 7-9 in Ontario boards of education and schools, called the 1990 Ontario Guidance Survey. Topics covered include the content of guidance programs, with emphasis on those programs most commonly delivered to 11-14 year olds: transition program, drop-out prevention programs, and career exploration programs. It gives special attention to the needs and interests of girls and special needs groups. It also examines the situation for Franco-Ontarians.

The issues and concerns of women in engineering, based on the responses of 1200 female engineers in Ontario to a 110-question, multiple-choice survey. Descriptions of the survey design and results, conclusions, and an outline of the Women in Engineering Advisory Committee's (WEAC) goals are included. In 1987, 12% of engineering students in Ontario were female, while in some medical schools 50% of students were women. Only 3% of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario (APEO) members are women. While the women said they were happy with their profession, they felt that their professional development lags behind that of men, and that family commitments and maternity leave may penalize them. More than 70% were married and half of them had children. Chemical and civil engineering are most popular with women. 80% of the respondents have been working for less than 15 years, compared to 50% for all engineers. Most of the respondents thought that engineering is not being adequately promoted among women. The lack of role models is seen as a barrier for women interested in engineering. Most believe the family is the biggest influence in the decision to become an engineer. Most of respondents agreed that a sole woman in a team experiences added stress due to her visibility. 38% of the respondents thought that engineering students' image deterred women from choosing engineering. 50% of women who had worked for less than 5 years believed this. 45% believed that men are promoted more readily, while 50% felt that men's access to professional contacts is an advantage not shared by women.

This annual report assists school divisions in assessing their operations by providing comparative statistical and monetary data, by school division. The Financial Reporting and Accounting in Manitoba Education system, FRAME, uses a multi-dimensional accounting code structure which allows expenditures to be reported by two main funds: operating and capital. Within the operating fund, expenditures are further sub-divided into 9 functions which cover everything from regular instruction to maintenance and operations.

Manitou Falls Generating Station is a 69 foot high by 1100 foot long concrete gravity dam and earth wing dam structure located on the English River north of Dryden, Ontario. Some structural distress was observed in the powerhouse which abuts the main concrete dam. As the first step in installing an alignment survey on the crest of the structure, eight brass plugs were installed in late 1989. Off-dam survey monuments and an inverse pendulum were requested to complete the deformation monitoring instrumentation for the concrete gravity dam. These instruments were installed in September 1990. This report gives a description of the installations and the initial readings from them.

To achieve the greatest success with forest plantation establishment, tree seedlings must be of the highest physiological quality. An ability to assess the physiological status of tree seedlings, accurately and quickly, is crucial for determining seedling stock quality. The integrating variable chlorophyll fluorescence (Fvar) system provides a rapid, non-invasive and non-destructive assessment of the mechanisms by which environmental factors and nursery practices affect the photosynthetic physiology of intact seedlings. This manual provides information on variable chlorophyll fluorescence as an important tool for assessing seedling physiological quality. It describes the fluorometer system, instructs in its use, gives protocols for the acquisition of data, and provides assistance in the interpretation of data. The manual also explains the physiological basis of the Fvar assessment, and provides seasonal baseline examples for this assessment.

The Many uses of belief in AI

by R.F. Hadley. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1989. 7 p. Bibliogr.

MICROLOG 92-05420 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Within artificial intelligence and the cognitively related disciplines, there exists a multiplicity of uses of 'belief'. This paper distinguishes six distinct ways in which belief is used in AI and argues that not all of these uses reflect a difference of opinion about an objective feature of reality. In some cases, the differing uses reflect differing concerns with special AI applications and in other cases, genuine differences exist about the nature of what is pre-theoretically called belief. It should be beneficial to unravel the distinct uses and motivations surrounding 'belief' in order to discover which usages merely reflect differing pragmatic concerns and which usages genuinely reflect divergent views about reality.

MICROLOG 92-01800 1 fiche

An area of potential invasion of the zebra mussel was determined based primarily on its thermal requirements as determined from its distribution in Europe. There are also chemical limits to the mussel's distribution, with the larvae having very low survival rates at low pH and calcium concentration. The report uses data from over 6000 inland lakes in the Ontario Acid Sensitivity Data Base, along with maps of bedrock and surficial geology and of major highways to construct maps of the relative probability of zebra mussel invasion to inland waters of the province. Problems of interpretation and extrapolation associated with current understanding of the chemical requirements of the mussel are also discussed.

The Forest Products Program's main objective is to expand the market acceptance of Alberta products, a goal which can in many cases be achieved by third party evaluation of the products. In 1982/83 the Alberta Research Council established a Forest Products Testing Laboratory. This report lists the activities of the laboratory in 1988/89 and describes activities in 1989/90, including the Standards Council of Canada (SCC) accreditation for testing panel products (CSA 0325), the SCC accreditation for certifying panel products (CSA 0325), maintenance of SCC scope of accreditation, participation on technical committees, and industry input regarding codes and standards. Also included is the application for accreditation to the SCC, the SCC scope of accreditation, and the European sample progress report.

This Task Force report presents a discussion of the obstacles to marketing within the B.C. high technology industry, a proposed strategic plan, and background information about the industry and its current marketing practices. The study identified the current strengths and weaknesses of the companies' marketing practices; identified major obstacles to improving those marketing practices; and developed a strategic plan to address them. A mail questionnaire was sent to 1,044 companies, 15 percent of which replied. In March and April 1991, 57 representatives of the industry were interviewed in person or by telephone, including marketing consultants, directors of university liaison offices, government officers in agencies offering marketing assistance programs, and industry people from a variety of high technology sectors. In June 1991, a forum discussion was held with 89 people, a cross section of those involved in the industry and related government agencies. Case studies of B.C. high technology industries were also reviewed.

Mass loading of phosphorus to Lake Diefenbaker

MICROLOG 92-00570 1 fiche

Lake Diefenbaker, a multi-use storage reservoir on the South Saskatchewan River, is the largest body of high quality water in southern Saskatchewan. The report of a federal-provincial water quality study of Lake Diefenbaker and the Upper South Saskatchewan River conducted during 1984 and 1985 indicated that the trophic status of the lake ranged from mesotrophic to oligotrophic, and that phosphorus was the limiting factor to plant productivity in the lake. This report examined the phosphorus load (total and dissolved) entering Lake Diefenbaker based on two independent data sets (1975-88, monthly sampling and 1985-88 weekly sampling); compared phosphorus loads from the two data sets, and made recommendations for future monitoring protocols; examined phosphorus retention by the reservoir and determined whether the sediments are a phosphorus source or sink; and made recommendations on phosphorus objectives for the South Saskatchewan River upstream of Lake Diefenbaker.

Mass market computers for software development

The mass market or appliance computer has become a plausible alternative to workstations for software development by providing a focus for all the professional activities of a developer, including program development, documentation, and preparation of presentations. The primary form of software used on such computers is shrink-wrapped software, which has profound implications on how it is used. This paper describes the advantages of mass market computers and discusses how an environment, consisting of mass market computers, has influenced the development of a novel source management scheme. Typical hardware and software configurations are included.

Materials selection and performance in gas turbines for base loaded utility electrical generation

by G. Bellamy and J.O. Noga. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. i, 43 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-65-K)
MICROLOG 92-01997 1 fiche

The use of expensive gaseous or distillate fuels in gas turbines was justified over the past several decades as provision for electrical utility peak demands. Recent advances in coal gasification technology and development of the combined cycle philosophy have increased overall unit efficiency beyond that achieved in conventional fossil-fired boiler steam turbine plants. This, together with short lead time requirements and lower installation costs, increases the attractiveness of gas turbines for possible base loaded duties. For a life expectancy in excess of 10,000 hours, careful attention must be paid to turbine component materials selection and performance. Although some aircraft engine technology is applicable, large land-based gas turbines with output in the 100-150 MW range have many unique characteristics and requirements. This report presents the rationale for current practice in materials selections together with the direction of research efforts toward more advanced alternatives.

A problem frequently faced by shopping centre planners is how to locate the shops in relation to one another. A natural objective is to achieve a suitable level of pedestrian movement throughout the centre and a good layout will increase overall profitability. This requires the knowledge of pedestrian flows between pairs of shops, by itself a difficult problem. If the relevant data is available, the optimal layout problem is a hard combinatorial optimization problem. If the shopping centre is linear, it is akin to a large scale seriation problem. This paper presents a dynamic programming algorithm for this case, as well as a greedy heuristic adapted to the case of tree-shaped shopping centres. It is illustrated on a numerical example.

A promising alternative to in situ methods such as wave buoys for measuring ocean wave spectra is HF ground wave radar. This paper describes an algorithm used to extract the nondirectional wave-height spectrum from the backscatter return of a stationary ship- or rig-mounted radar employing an omnidirectional antenna for both transmission and reception. To test the effectiveness of the algorithm, its estimates are compared to those of a WAVE-TRACK buoy using data collected onboard CFAV Quest during 1988.

Measurement of oil thickness on water from aircraft

This report examines the feasibility of using active microwave spectroscopy and electromagnetic thermoelastic emission for airborne measurement of the thickness of an oil layer on water. Active microwave spectroscopy uses changes in surface reflectivity as a function of radar frequency. A theoretical assessment of this technique was made using plane layer theory for complex dielectrics. In the electromagnetic thermoelastic emission technique, the oil is illuminated with electromagnetic energy, some of which is converted to acoustic energy because of local heating effects. The acoustic response is indicative of the thickness of the oil. An order-of-magnitude theoretical assessment of this technique was made. This report presents the results of each assessment.

Because of elevated ozone levels in summer in Ontario, an intensive field study was conducted in the summer of 1988 to investigate the role of nitrogen oxides (NOx) vs volatile organic compounds (VOCs) and biogenic vs anthropogenic emissions in controlling ozone and other oxidant concentrations in Ontario. A second intensive field campaign was undertaken during the spring of 1990 to investigate the effect of season on the production of biogenic VOCs and the formation of ozone and other oxidants. The second study also included the measurement of VOCs at Egbert and Lake Traverse, in rural south-central Ontario, over 55 days from March 16-April 29, 1990. This report describes improvements in the analysis technique developed to measure VOCs in ambient air.

Petroleum production often involves simultaneous flow of three immiscible fluids through subterranean porous rock formations and thorough analysis of these processes is impossible without reliable three-phase relative permeability data. This report presents the results of an experimental investigation of three-phase relative permeability at elevated temperatures and pressures. The work reviewed the previous measurements of three-phase permeability; improved the reliability of steady-state three-phase (oil/water/gas) relative permeability measurements at elevated temperatures and pressures; and examined the feasibility of using an unsteady-state method for such measurements. A literature review was also conducted.

The movement of sea ice against a wide structure, such as an artificial island, produces piles of broken ice called ice rubble. If such piles become sufficiently firmly grounded, subsequent movements will not dislodge them, and a ground ice rubble field will form which could be used to protect the structures from further ice loads. During the winter of 1986-87, a full scale field study of ice rubble was conducted at Esso's Caisson Retained Island at a drilling location in the Beaufort Sea to obtain ice rubble characteristics and load transmission data so that a theoretical model could be developed. This paper summarizes the collected field data. Data was collected from stress sensors on the caissons, pressure panels in the rubble, pressure sensors in the sea ice, strain rosettes, thermocouple arrays, movement surveys, and rubble profile surveys.

Measuring Sustainable Development : energy production and use in Canada (1991 : Montreal, Que.). Ottawa : National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy, 1991. vi, 44 p.
MICROLOG 92-06635 1 fiche

The National Round Table was formed in 1989 to identify, explain, and stimulate the acceptance and implementation of sustainable development by all Canadians. This workshop was designed to discuss indicators of sustainable development related to energy production and use. Goals of the workshop were to provide advice on a draft series of indicators for sustainable development in energy production and use at the national level (macro indicators); to identify practical links between macro (national and international level) and micro (individual or corporate level) indicators, to test the effectiveness of this process in developing acceptable indicators for other topics; to encourage other groups to take the lead in developing indicators relevant to them; and to identify the next steps for progress. Participants represented energy suppliers, energy users, and energy policy makers in government and academia.

This paper presents a method for estimating technical change using incomplete panel data and shows how estimates of cost elasticities for output qualities can be used to evaluate productivity growth adjusted for quality changes. To control for the incomplete nature of the sample used, specific dummy variables for entry in and exit from the sample are introduced into the cost function. The proposed methodology is applied to a sample of trucking firms from Quebec.

Second, if it should not, what should be done about the holdback provisions, particularly as they affect consumers with little or no knowledge of their statutory obligations? Possible solutions are presented, including a repeal of the Act, improved observance of the Act, create exceptions, restructure the lien/holdback tandem, or make the Act an opt-in scheme.

Eight ventilation systems intended to meet the continuous ventilation requirements specified in the Canadian residential standard CSA F326 were investigated. The systems were installed, commissioned, and tested in the field to obtain operating experience and to establish confidence in the simulation software. Carbon dioxide and formaldehyde levels were simulated in houses with several different ventilation system configurations. The cases modeled included houses with and without forced-air recirculation systems, average and tight building envelopes, and average and heavy occupancies.

The passage of the Competition Act and the Competition Tribunal Act in 1986 was heralded as the beginning of a new era in Canadian competition policy. For nearly two decades, various governments had unsuccessfully attempted to resuscitate the ineffective merger and monopoly provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. A difficult yet essential task was distinguishing between behaviour that is anti-competitive and exclusionary and that which is that result of superior competitive performance and efficiency. This paper reviews the various proposals to reform the merger and monopoly provisions of the Combines Investigation Act and examines the operation of the 1986 Competition Act amendments in these areas.

The passage of the Competition Act and the Competition Tribunal Act in 1986 was seen and the start of a new era in Canadian competition policy. For nearly two decades, various governments had unsuccessfully tried to revive the ineffective merger and monopoly provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. Central to the reform process were issues such as how to deal with abuse of market power and with mergers that might increase the possibility of abuse, who should adjudicate upon these questions, and whether mergers and monopolies should be civil rather than criminal matters. A difficult but essential task was distinguishing between behaviour that is anti-competitive and exclusionary and that which is the result of superior competitive performance and efficiency. ### Mesure en service de l'intensité sonore de ventilateurs résidentiels par J.D. Quirt. Ottawa : Société canadienne d'hypothèques et de logement, Division de la recherche, 1991. 14 p. : ill.

MICROLOG 92-07089 1 fiche

Ce rapport porte sur le débit d'air et sur l'intensité sonore des appareils. Les essais de débit sont abordés brièvement en raison de leur simplicité. Les essais acoustiques visaient non seulement à comparer la puissance acoustique obtenue en laboratoire avec les données en service, mais aussi à déterminer le lien existant entre la puissance acoustique et les niveaux de pression acoustique s'ensuivant dans les pièces. Le rapport présente une vue d'ensemble du travail accompli et un exposé des questions d'importance. Il se divise en cinq parties: détails d'installation et méthodes de mesure; résultats des mesures de débit d'air; résultats de la puissance acoustique; résultats du niveau de pression acoustique; et sommaire.

Cette recherche répertorie l'ensemble des décisions publiées par SOQUIJ en matière d'arbitrage de griefs lorsqu'une mesure disciplinaire ou non disciplinaire a été imposée par l'employeur. La recherche couvre les années 1982 à 1990. Le premier chapitre offre un aperçu succinct des formalités applicables grâce à un tableau synoptique. Les 26 chapitres qui suivent font état de la jurisprudence relativement aux 26 principaux motifs retenus à titre de manquement du salarié. On y précise la nature du motif et la doctrine pertinente. Des commentaires expliquent la structure de la jurisprudence à l'intérieur du plan de classification et soulignent les différentes tendances jurisprudentielles ou les jugements les plus importants, s'il y a lieu. Chaque résumé est suivi d'un indicateur factuel composé de trois éléments, soit: les noms des parties; les références de publication de toutes les instances où l'affaire a été portée, séparées par des points-virgules; et, le suivi de l'affaire dans une autre instance, s'il y a lieu. Finalement, on retrouvera en annexe la liste des principaux motifs invoqués par l'employeur à titre de manquement du salarié. Cette liste, au moyen de renvois pertinents, vous dirigera vers le chapitre approprié.

Met-star : a method for discriminating metonymy and metaphor by computer

MICROLOG 92-05698 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

The met-star method distinguishes selected examples of metonymy from metaphor and from literalness and anomaly in short English sentences. The method is part of Collative Semantics, a semantics for natural language processing. This paper describes the met-star method, discusses some deficiencies and some possible remedies in the method, relates the method to some of the main philosophical, linguistic, and psychological views of metonymy and metaphor, and to some other computational approaches.

Metal finishing survey for Ontario : report

Proctor & Hedfern Limited. Toronto : Ministry of the Environment, Waste Management Branch, 1991. 184 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-7729-7076-9
MICROLOG 92-01650 3 fiche

The Ontario Ministry of the Environment has become increasingly concerned over the management of wastes in the metal finishing industry in Ontario and therefore commissioned a survey of the industry to identify companies which are engaged in metal finishing, the processes which are conducted, the quantities and types of waste produced, and the type of metal finishing operations used. Metal finishing is defined here as electroplating, anodizing, chemical conversion coating (colouring, phosphating, passivation and chromating), immersion plating, electroless plating, hot dipping, printed circuit board manufacturing and chemical milling, etching, bright dipping, and stripping. A questionnaire was developed and sent to a master list of 1,422 companies, of which 77 were no longer operating. Of the 1,343 active companies, 52% responded, and 10 plants were visited to discuss operations in detail. This report discusses the methodology, gives a summary of responses to the questionnaire, and describes the use of reduction, recovery, recycling, and reuse among the companies.

In March 1990, large cracks were discovered in the main shaft of the Darlington U2 generator. This report covers the metallurgical investigation into the nature and cause of the cracking. The investigation consisted of replica examination of the cracks in the U2 rotor before the cracks were broken open, examination of one half of a retaining nut from the Unit 4 rotor, analysis of one half of the fractures from the U2 rotor after the shaft was broken open and determination of chemical and mechanical properties.

Meteorological prediction for nuclear emergency response : analysis of 1988-89 Pickering Mesonet data

by G.L. Ogram and V.W. Middleton. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. 41 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-200-K) MICROLOG 92-04147 1 fiche

Nuclear emergency response procedures established for Ontario require that meteorologists forecast meteorological conditions at the site of the emergency, including wind speed and direction, the standard deviation of wind direction, cloud cover, temperature, and precipitation. Forecast meteorological parameters will be input to an atmospheric dispersion model to predict the concentrations and dimensions of any release plume which will, in turn, determine the potential radiation dose. This report analyzes data for 1988 and 1989 from the Pickering MESONET meteorological monitoring network to determine trends in local meteorology in the vicinity of Pickering Nuclear Generating Station.

This report presents volume 1 of a study conducted to investigate the high wet deposition sulphate and nitrate episodes that contributed to the top 25 percent of annual deposition in 1985-86. The study determined the meteorological conditions and analyzed the source-receptor relationship of the high deposition episodes. Two Canadian Air and Precipitation Monitoring Network stations at Chalk River and Longwoods and two Acidic Precipitation in Ontario Study stations at Dorset and Longwoods in southern and central Ontario were selected. A total of 64 episodes, 31 in 1985 and 33 in 1986, were analyzed to examine the meteorological conditions that yielded different types of precipitation, and 72-hour backward trajectories for 1000 mb, 925 mb, 850 mb, and 700 mb were computed from a 3D trajectory model.

Il est démontré que l'utilisation d'antimousses contaminés par du dibenzofurane (DBF) ou de la dibenzo-p-dioxine (DBD) non chlorés dans les usines de pâte blanchie au chlore augmente considérablement la teneur du produit final en 2,3,7,8-TCDF et en 2,3,7,8-TCDD. Afin de réduire les quantités de ces substances toxiques dans les rejets des usines de pâte, Environnement Canada élabore un règlement visant à fixer les concentrations maximales de DBF et de DBD admissibles dans les antimousses destinés à ces usines. Ce document expose une méthode d'analyse pour le dosage du DBF et de la DBD dans les antimousses, à des concentrations peu élevées (de l'ordre du nanogramme par gramme).

The recent introduction of the zebra mussel into the Great Lakes has resulted in a serious fouling problem for all utilities using raw lake water. Chlorination of service water systems is the only effective control option available at present, although its long-range environmental effect may be unacceptable. To evaluate any control treatment, it must be possible to determine whether the mussels are alive or dead following the treatment. This project established a method for distinguishing live from dead veligers, post-veligers, and adult zebra mussels which is more rapid than conventional visual examination. Thermal shock, electric shock, and osmotic shock were evaluated against control groups of mussels which were microscopically observed after normal handling and no other additional stress. All sizes of mussels were used in the test and also mussels which had been exposed to sodium hypochlorite in typical station control situations.
